Questions and Answers. Miscellaneous.

Wants a Parrot.

Can you inform me in your valuable paper, how to procure a parrot? I would prefer one that has learned to talk, also would you kindly state the price?

ELIZABETH B. L.

Ans.—We cannot do more than refer you to our poultry advertising columns. Anyone having parrots for sale might find an advertisement profitable.

Hen Lice—Lumps on Geese—Ducks Die.

1. I am troubled with some kind of small insects, like small lice, in my hen-house. Please tell me if they are injurious to the hens, and what would be a good remedy? They are all over the hen-house, and get on us when working with the hens.

2. A large lump under the beak of geese. What is the cause of it, and what is the remedy?

3. Ducks seem dull and heavy from one to two days, and next day die. Matter appears around their nose. What is cause and remedy?

A. M.

Ans.—1. These are likely red mites. They feed on the birds when on the roost. Dust all the birds thoroughly with insect powder. Clean up the house, let in lots of light and sunshine, keep it dry and well ventilated, feed the stock well. Whitewash the premises thoroughly with lime, to which a little carbolic acid has been added. Prepare a good hot bath for the birds. These lice are very injurious in large numbers.

2. We cannot say what this is. It may be a tumor of some kind, or a growth, caused by injury. A breed of geese known as "African" geese, are naturally large underneath the base of the bill.

3. From the description given, it is impossible to give an answer. Death may have resulted from some form of cold which had developed into a contagious form, but we are not sure.

Hens Dying.

Have taken your paper for some time, and, as others receive helpful ideas in their work from you, I, for the first time, ask your help. My hens are dying, two or sometimes more ailing at the same time. They appear to get lame first, and have a looseness of the bowels, the droppings being of a shiny nature, and of a sulphury yellow color. They generally live quite a time with it, and have generally a fair appetite, but finally they become apparently paralyzed. I have lost a great many this summer. Now, what can I do to prevent this loss? They have a cement-block house and cement floor, which we keep clean and covered three or four inches or deeper with chaff. We feed them wheat, oats or barley with corn occasionally. This corn is on the cob, and, at times, it has been rather musty. Would that cause the trouble? I quit the corn about three months ago, but yet they die. They have the run of the farm. There is a pond at the foot of the barn-yard, which has no outlet that I know of, and they will drink there, no matter what other accommodation there is. The turtles in this same pond kill a great many of my ducks. Do you know of any feasible plan to free the pond of turtles?

J. R.

Ans.—From the description given, we are inclined to think the hens have tuberculosis. To be sure of this fact, kill a badly-infected bird, and perform a post-mortem examination. If the liver shows enlarged, and is covered with yellowish or whitish matter, tubercles, there can be no doubt but that the disease is tuberculosis. If you do not feel assured upon examination, send a specimen to the Bacteriological Department, O. A. C., Guelph, Ont. They will examine and advise. In the meantime isolate all diseased birds, thoroughly clean and disinfect the hen-house and premises, and whitewash. Feed only on good feed, and, if possible, keep them away from the stagnant water. It might pay to place a tight-wire fence around the pond. We don't know how you can get the turtles, unless, by some means, dry the pond.
