have taken part in the great things which history will record as having been done in this great war." Mr. Lyon proposed to deal main-ly with the operations of the Canaly with the operations of the Canadian forces at Lens, but in commenting, paused to reveal the true importance of the service done by the first Canadian division at Ypres in April, 1915, when, under the first gas attack in the history of the world, they saved the situation for the allied cause. Had the fee broken through there, Calais must have fallen, heavy guns would have laid the port of Dover and the inland towns of Kent in ruins, forinland towns of Kent in ruins, forced the closing of the Port of Lon-don and the disuse of the English Channel. That stand of Canadians saved the situation, gave the allies lime to rally and prepare, and proved the merits of the Canadians as splendid defensive troops.

Passing next to the battle of Courcelette, Mr. Lyon recounted how once more the Canadians proved their worth, where they held their posts against vastly superior forces. Then it was, that, having proved themselves veteran troops, they were moved to the Somme for their first offensive operation, fighting that resulted in forcing the foe into the greatest retirement of the war on the west front. Some few months later, said Mr. Lyon, he had visited the Somme battlefield, and to his hearers he gave a vivid description of the battle scarred scene, shell of the battle scarred scene, shell boles now covered with long grass, and the poppies and the yellow mustard blooming among the wooden crosses which marked the last resting places of the dead. Here the British alone lost a half million men, and the enemy probably more. Here it was that the Canadians earned the right to be set in any position, entrusted with any task, and to carry it out. They were now transferred once more, to the most important offensive operation yet planned by the higher command on the west front, that of taking the coal centre lof Lens, which had been one of the first German objectives in the war, along with the textile centre Lille. With these points in her grasp, Germany, had Britain not entered the war, would have been able to force France to her knees within six months. Thus it was that the first rush of the Hun during the invasion of France was toward these points, which were the scene of Are Canada's Hero Sons sanguinary fighting during the earler days of the war.

The speaker drew a vivid word picture of the early morning assault, the German gas, as a barbaric weapon of warfare, but for illuminating purposes and to strike terror to the heart of the foe. "The fireworks of the Toronto exhibition" declared Mr. Lyon, "are nothing compared to those which precede a battle." The entire crest of Hill 70 was swept over in three hours an advance of fisteen hundred yards being made upon a front of 3500. Day after day the Hun came back in vain efforts to win back the Canadian gains; day after day the flower of the German army hundred yards being made upon

He closed by delivering to his hearers a message from the veterans of the message from the veterans of the first contingent, pleading for a fur-lough for those who had undergone the horrors of three years of war on the west front.

Vote of Thanks "Mr. Lyons' message to us is one well worth taking to heart by all." declared Mayor MacBride, in moving a vote of thanks. "We must carry on at home if we expect our boys at the front to do the same."
"The hearts of all of us must beat the faster after hearing these things from such an observer of the human side of the war," declared W. B. Preston, seconding the vote, which was expressed by a salvo of cheers from the entire gathering.
