He can have no fellowship nor communion with those who have been "converted from the error of their ways," " who have been called from darkness seewledge of the only living and true God."-He cannot belong to the congregation of the redeemed, whose highest duty is to beseech and picad with men to shun the delusions of that path from which they had been mercifully rescued, and which leadeth down to " eternal death. If men who have "ceased to do evil and learned to do well," are to be prohibited from expressing and publishing the happiness which they experieace from the change, then the progress of Christianity will be bereft of one of the chief inwhich its great author intended for its advancement; and had "A Layman" lived in the days of St. Paul he would have proposed to gag the Apostle-such is the legitimate effect of countries, a large class who ignorantly and blasphameously suppose that owing to the faith of their fathers and an Act of Parliament, men are born Christians, and hence require neither conversion nor regeneration! And in this class alone can " A Layman" find fellowship. Continued in our next.
