LORD MORDEN'S DAUGHTER —OR— THE TRAGEDY OF THE CEDARS.

CHAPTER XXVI.

"Do you know that this bright morning we start, hand in hand, upon our life's journey—that we are one forevermore?"

"Forevermore!" she replied, softly. "What a beautiful thought, Edmund. There is nothing can part us now—not even death itself!"

"Do not speak of death," he said, with an involuntary shudder. "We have before us a world of beauty and brightness—a wildwood filled with flowers and song. I am almost terrified when I think how narrowly I escaped a life without love. If I had not met you, Dora, I should have drifted into marriage with Lady Clare Moncrieff; I should have married her to please my father, and there would have been before me long years of misery, of unsatisfied yearnings."

"But, Edmund, why think of this when Heaven has ordained it otherwise?" Dora murmured. "Your meeting with Lady Clare is nothing but an episode; she was not your twin soul—she was not your other self. I do not now regret that Mr. Marlowe persecuted me. I do not now regret it because if he had never come into my life we should not be so near to each other now. The very horror I feel for the man makes me realize more and more the intensity of my love for you."

For a little while there was a happy silence; then Edmund said:

"How beautiful would this world become if governed by a love like ours, Dora? And why should it not be? The cynic would call me a visionary—a fool! And yet my soul tells me that it was Heaven's original plan."

It was nearly noon when they passed the little post office at Kew, and Locksey saw the postmistress standing in the doorway.

She was looking toward him, a mournful smile upon her face, and he wondered why an apprehensive chill shot through his heart.

"I am as weak as a child," he thought. "My nervous system has been completely upset by the continual strain. Why should I recall the stories of other people's misery?"

The cab came to a sudden halt, and Dora was gazing through the fragrant avenues that led to her future home. Then the horse was turned into the drive, and Edmund whispered:

"This is our Garden of Eden, my darling!"

"We will not call it by that name," said Dora, quickly, "lest it be invaded by a serpent. Oh, how lovely everything is! I never dreamed it possible that so much beauty could live beyond the high walls that hide it from the road."

The cab stopped before the principal entrance, and the creepers shone blood-red in the light of the sun, while a gust of soft September wind carried a shower of golden leaves from the summit of the tall limes that crowned the hill at whose base "The Myrtles" nestled.

Dora's raptures were interrupted by the appearance of Madam Bell, who was almost hysterical in her excitement.

Locksey lifted his bride from the hansom, while Madam Bell was saying, between laughter and tears:

"I am so glad it is all over and done with, Miss Deane—I mean Mrs. Locksey! Isn't it funny to hear your new name? Everything is in perfect order, and I have prepared a sweet little wedding breakfast, entirely upon my own responsibility; but I do hope that there will not be more than half-a-dozen guests!"

"We shall only have one," smiled Dora. "And, do you know, I could gladly dispense with that one, for I want my husband," she blushed prettily. "I want my husband all to myself to-day, at least!"

"You have reason to be the happiest girl in the world," said Madam Bell. "I never thought it possible for a man to care for a woman as Mr. Locksey does for you."

She whisked her young mistress upstairs, then left her to bathe her hands and face, saying:

"The one guest has arrived; I hear the sound of a carriage. I shall be ready with my surprise breakfast in exactly twenty minutes."

Dora followed her downstairs almost immediately, and saw Mr. Fairfax standing in the center of the hall, a most peculiar expression on his face, an expression that haunted her for many days.

He bowed slightly, and attempted to be pleasant.

"We have not been properly introduced, Mrs.—Mrs. Locksey."

Why did he hesitate when he came to her name?

She blushed and smiled, and Mr. Fairfax thought that his eyes had never before rested upon so lovely a creature.

"We have not been properly introduced," he went on; "but I think that we may safely dispense with the usual formalities. Edmund and I were boys together," he added, by way of explanation, "and only lost sight of each other while he was abroad."

He could not proceed, but turned away abruptly. The happy smile that parted her lips, the half-hidden fires in her dewy eyes, spoke of a joy that must be, alas! speedily dispelled.

And Dora was wondering why Mr. Fairfax acted so strangely. She had heard Edmund say that he was a clever barrister—a rising light in the legal firmament—a man who would some day be a great judge.

"I have heard that very clever people are eccentric," she thought. "Perhaps Mr. Fairfax is one of these. He has a fine face, but there is the shadow of a great trouble in his eyes."

CHAPTER XXVII.

But for the presence of Fred Fairfax, the wedding breakfast would have been a success. Madam Bell did the honors of the table, while Edmund and Dora sat near enough to be able to surreptitiously look unutterable things, and fondly press each other's fingers.

The barrister attempted to toast the bride and bridegroom, but his speech was so lame—so lacking in heartiness, that a brief silence followed, almost amounting to gloominess.

"I am quite out of sorts this morning," he said, in excuse. "You will tell Mrs. Locksey why at some future time, Edmund?"

"I understand, old fellow," was the sympathetic rejoinder. "And I do not wonder that the sight of our happiness unmans you—and here, above all places."

"Here, above all places," echoed Fairfax.

Locksey rose from the table, seeing that his friend was impatient, and the two left the room together, Fairfax leading the way to a small conservatory, where none could see or hear them.

"Edmund," he said, shortly, "you are wondering why I came to 'The Myrtles' to-day; why I should make of myself a sort of death-head at the feast? I saw your annoyance the moment I announced my intention of following you."

"Not annoyance, exactly," replied Edmund. "I was surprised, and felt that a visit here, and upon my wedding day, would be sure to reopen an old wound. I did not desire any chilling influences, for I wish my darling to be supremely happy now that we have emerged from the shadows."

He took his friend's hand, adding: "Do not take my speech unkindly, old fellow. I know that your motives, whatever they may have been, were good ones."

Just then he heard Dora's voice in the garden, and his heart pulsed with joy.

"One minute, old fellow. My wife is calling."

Before Fairfax could speak, he had passed out of the conservatory, through a door that opened upon a wilderness of leaves and blossoms.

PAINS ACROSS THE BACK

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mitchell, Ontario.—"I have taken your medicine for a number of years. I do not take it steady all the time, but I am never without it. I always keep it in the house. I took it first for pains in the abdomen and bearing-down pains, headaches and pains across the back. I have my home to look after and many a day I can't get up at all. I saw the advertisement in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and Mrs. John Miller told me about it. Every time I take it, it makes me feel better and I always recommend it to my friends. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about this medicine and you may use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. F. J. WASSMAN, Mitchell, Ontario.

The merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is told by women to each other. Many women know by experience what this medicine will do and they are anxious for others to know. Such testimony should cause any woman suffering from the troubles so common to her sex to give this well-known medicine a fair trial. Do you know that in a recent census among women users of the Vegetable Compound over 220,000 replies were received. To the question, "Have you received benefit by taking this medicine?" 48 per cent. replied "Yes." This means 98 out of every 100 women are in better health because they have given this medicine a fair trial.

DOING GOOD.

WALT MATON

Our village pastor doesn't try to rob Brer Darwin of his crown; he merely tells us when we die we'll travel either up or down. He doesn't say a word which disturbs us in many churches nowadays, and only does his best to curb our tendencies to godless ways. "He's far from being up to date, his sermons are like sounding brass," his critics say, "he gives much weight to outworn things that cut no grass. He keeps no tab on modern thought, he bores the highbrow in his pew, and to the pulpit he has brought no message that is fresh and new. And yet we think if we should all observe the pastor's stale advice, we'd cast out bitterness and gain a peace beyond all price. He boasts the morals of our dads, which modern sleeks have outgrown, and argues that no stock of seeds will buy a conscience fit to own. He preaches honesty and truth and loving kindness and such things, and promises that righteous youth shall in the future walk with kings. He preaches justice and content, he stands for merit, versus pelf, and urges every living gent to love his neighbor as himself. He never gives us something new, he talks old matters till he's done, but all he says is sane and true, and vital as the glowing sun. His influence is all for good, despite the Modern Thinker's sneer; the theme he argues has withstood the critics of two thousand years."

"The Black Hat of the Moralist"

"Canon Green, referring to a recent letter in the Manchester Guardian in which a correspondent had written contemptuously of 'the black hat of the moralist,' said: 'Are we ashamed of wearing the black hat of the moralist?' he asked. 'Apparently the writer could see nothing except a matter for ridicule in anyone who says 'this is wrong, and so I shall do it.' This is right, and so I shall do it.' I would rather wear the black hat of the moralist than the motley of a fool, for it is the fool who has said in his heart, 'There is no God.'"

Just Folks.

By EDGAR GUEST.

THE LITTLE SICK BOY.
Day by day and week by week
Unto him the doctor came,
Little fellow, pale of cheek,
Bending o'er his twisted frame.
Never ran, and never played,
Day by day in bed he stayed.

Doctors tried to make him well,
Still he lived and still he grew,
All the stories doctors told,
Soon that little fellow knew,
Heard them whisper, heard them say:
"Sometime he may romp and play."

Seems he fancied children all
Suffer pain before they grow,
And his doctor's warning call
Every baby has to know,
Patiently he waited long
For the day when he'd be strong.

Once he saw a healthy lad
Near his window, passing by,
Saw the sturdy frame he had,
And his doctor's warning cry.
From his lips this question came:
"Tell me, what's his doctor's name?"

Our Dumb Animals.

REPORT OF THE CHIEF AGENT FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 5th.

Attended to the landing of ninety-eight (98) head of cattle, a lot of sheep and pigs from the S.S. Dieuse. As previously reported, the pigs and poultry were overpowered. The company have been written concerning the same and I think this will not happen again. The pigs were taken to the Abattoir Co. premises and taken from boxes, the boxes were cleaned and refilled with dry straw. Attended to the landing of eighty head of cattle from the Sackem, also five horses, before their landing, hay was put around where the cattle would be tied, large troughs of water were also prepared for them, for this I am very thankful. Attended as well to landing of twenty-one (21) head of cattle at Railway Station, everything satisfactory, also twenty-seven and one horse from the S.S. Sable I. Cattle in excellent condition, very kindly attended to by Harvey's employees. I would also like to thank Constable Vall of St. Mary's for the great interest taken by him in the case where a man struck a horse on the side two or three times with a hammer. The horse died from the effects. The Constable had the man summoned, the culprit was taken before Magistrate Hogan. The man was found guilty and was taken to the penitentiary. Humanely put to death a dog on Scott Street, one on Hayward Avenue, one on Pleasant Street and one on South Side Hills. Those which have been put to death have been an annoyance to the respective neighbourhoods. Humanely put to death a horse for Mr. Gulliver on Beaumont St. The horse was suffering from a disease prevalent among horses at the present time. Mr. Gulliver contributed to the funds of the Society. Another horse on Pennewell Road, belonging to Mr. Francis and one on Hamilton Avenue were also put to death. Several horses are laid aside suffering from present disease. Two cases of cruelty come before the court on Monday. I examined quite a number of outport ponies and found them all in fairly good condition. A horse reported by a gentleman on Military Road is lame from a natural cause. Have been busy during the week, but did my best to attend to every call.

Indigestion Bilious Spells

Mr. John Hresavich, Tenby, Man., writes:—"My stomach was all upset, I suffered from indigestion, biliousness and vomiting. I became so weak, I had to go to bed. I tried Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and in three days was up and around again. I have not had an attack of this nature since."

PERHAPS it has never occurred to you that your troubles from indigestion are really caused by torpid liver action and consequent constipation of the bowels. Stomach tablets and lotions sometimes afford temporary relief but they do not get at the cause.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills positively remove the cause of trouble by their direct and combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels. A single box will convince you of their efficiency.
