CHAPTER XXXVIII.

A TERRIBLE SCENE—PHILIP AND JIM AT THE OLD HOUSE AT DUGDEN.

Philip entered the room alone, the others keeping back beyond the doorway to watch the effect.

And the effect was simply indescribale. When Dick opened the door, he expected it was the chambermaid who had knocked for admittance, and he had opened his lips to gruffly bid her begone when the form of Philip was presented to his vision.

His first account.

sion.

His first sensation was that of surprise only at sight of a strange figure, but in another instant he recognised that face, which he had seen but once, yet could never forget. Then his jaw suddenly dropped, and he staggered back with an aspect of dumb horror and a glare in his red, flery eyes which nothing could surpass.

red, flery eyes which nothing could surpass.

Barnard Hayes sprang to his feet, and stood in livid and speechless consternation. He had resumed the wig and spectacles, but had forgot his assumed part, or was meapable of acting it. Probably he divined that Philip had penetrated his disguise, and that it would be useless to keep it up; but most likely the rushing feeling of dismay at sight of Philips overwhelmed him that he that he stood like a man frozen into ice or petrifiend into stone.

stood like a man frozen into ice or petrifiend into stone.

Never was surprise or terror more thorough and complete, and if Philip had cared to gratify any feeling of vulgar triumph he had ample opportunity of doing so. But at that moment very different and far more serious and sterner feelings had possession of him. A very whillpool of passion was boiling in his bosom, as with folded arms, compressed lips, knitted brow, he confronted themseeming to their affrighted and trembling soul's like an angel of vengeance about to sweep them to destruction.

"Oh, most damnable villans," he said in a voice of unmeasured scorn, loathing, and rage. "As I look upon you, Barnard Hayes, and remember the agony and wee you have been the means of heaping on me, overy passion and instinct in my being tempts me to strangle you todeath. And were I to do so, neither man nor God would be unjust enough to say I had done wrong. But I will not defile myself by contact with a wretch so vile. As for this robber and murderer who is your accomplice and tool, the law will give me vengeance enough on him. I have entered this room for the sole purpose of telling you that I have discovered your hellish plot and the mode in which you lave just been planning to consummate it. From the other side of yonder I have heard all."

"Then, damn you, you'll never hear anything more," shouted Dick, as with Philip.

"Kill him Dick; kill the viper," yelled Hayes, and, with frantic infatuation, he also leapt forward to grapple with the south.

siso leapt forward to grapple with the youth.

Quick as lightning, and with a flash in his eye, Philip clenched his right hand, and shot a blow from his shoulder against Dick's breast, which made him drop like a felled ox. Then, almost in the same moment, he had Barnard Hayes in his terrific grasp, with a choking clutch on his throat which made his eyes start and his face grow purple. So suddenly and quickly was all this done that Jim and the landlord had not time to burst into the room till Dick had been floored. They were ready now, however, to protect Philip from being assailed a second time; but Dick lay like a stone, apparently insensible, and the lawyer was so powerless in the hands of the hands of the youth that there was no need of their help in that quarter.

"Time tries all Things," and has proved that Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry is the remedy par excellence for the cure of coughs, colds, croup, Hooping cough bronchitis, asthma, phthysic, sore throat, and influenza. It cures coughs and colds tostanter. It clothes the irritated parts; it heals the inflammation; and even consumption itself yields to its magic influence.
