The Gerrymander Outrage

Engages the Attention of the Dominion House.

Mr. Mills' Impassioned Protest Against the Contemplated Fraud.

A Crisis Reached in the History of the Country-But the Tory Vassals Do Their Masters' Bidding and Vote Down All Amend-

[Special to the ADVERTISER.] OTTAWA, Ont., June 14.—Things are indeed reaching a crisis in the history of parliamentary government in Canada when a prominent and trusted leader of parliamentary government in Canada when a prominent and trusted leader of one of the great parties in the State declares from his seat in the House that if legislation like the gerrymander is to continue to be forced on the minority, resort might be had to something stronger than denunciation. A part of the speech delivered by the Hon. David Mills was a hardly-veiled warning that the subversion of the spirit of the constitution might lead hardly-veiled warning that the subversion of the spirit of the constitution might lead to physical resistance if that was the only means by which a recognition of the rights of the people could be obtained and the public conscience awakened. These were not Mr. Mills' exact words, they will be found below, but it is a fair paraphrase of them. Mr. Mills distinctly raised the level of the debate. He considered this bill as an entension of the fraud of 1882, and as legislation calculated to hill as an entension of the fraud of 1882, and as legislation calculated to work mischief. The time had come to ask whither are we drifting? There were matters in regard to which they could as party men differ, but redistribution was a duty on Parliament, not the Executive. "I do not know," continued Mr. Mills, "if this measure is adopted, what may be the consequence of it; but I ask the honorable gentlemen opposite to seriously consider it. In my opinion it is absolutely impossible to maintain this union if this policy of one of the great parties in the State making war on the other great party is of the great parties in the State making war on the other great party is to be sanctioned." With increasing indignation and in significant language, the henorable gentleman went on: "While you may begin a contest by an intellectual fight in Parliament, it is very likely to grow to something far more serious than what honorable gentlemen suppose in their attempt to establish by unfair means the permanent supremacy of one party in this country over the other." Mr. Mills proceeded to show that the union was established in accordance with the spirit and principle of British Parliamentary institutions, and if these were not mentary institutions, and if these were not

mentary institutions, and if these were not mentary institutions, and if these were not observed it disturbed the organic basis of Confederation. To use the power of the Executive to establish the ascendancy of party was un-British, and violated the spirit of the constitution. This bill tied hand and foot not only the minority in this House, but bound the electors by preventing a free expression of public opinion. This was an abuse of power so gross that it became the duty of the Opposition to avail themselves of all the means at their disposal to prevent it becoming law. In support of this doctrine he quoted Lord Salisbury. Alluding to the preservation of municipal boundaries he pressed upon the House the propriety of preserving what he termed the organic life of the community because the Dominion did not divide the country into districts but was itself made up of an aggregation of districts which existed long before Confederation. If municipal organizations and associations were disregarded it destroyed the historical continuity of localities and their political organism. In support of this view he quoted Hon. Carnarvon's speech on introducing the British North America Act in were disregariou is a continuity of localities and their political continuity of localities and their view he quoted Hon. Carnaryon's speech on introducing the British North America Act in the British Parliament. He appealed to the honorable gentlemen opposite in the name of their love of constitutional freedom to pause. They were not giving our system a fair trial, and until they roturned to the principles of readjustment laid down by Sir John Macdonald in 1872 they could not have permanency. They could not have permanency. They could not have permanency. They could not lance permanency and the seat in the Quebec Legislature. He will take his seat in the Quebec Legislature. Ex-Premier the honorable gentiemen opposite in the honorable gentiemen opposite in the ham of their love of constitutional freedom to pause. They were not giving our system a fair trial, and until they returned to the principles of readjustment laid down by Sir John Macdonald in 1872 they could not have permanency. They could not lignore those whose rights were being invaded. Their course was calculated to degrade public sentiment and further embitter public life. In reply to the argument against the adoption of Mr. McCarthy's plan that it would disturb 74 constituencies in the Dominion, Mr. Mills said: "I do not care how many it would disturb provided we got back to proper principles." He pointed no less that the gerrymander of 1882 disturbed no less than 55 constituencies in one province.

There was no reply to Mr. Mills' great speech. The Executive relied on its majority and that majority evidently regarded themselves as simply vassals of the Executive. In no other Parliament in the world would such a scathing indictment of existing methods of government go unworld would such a seathing indictment of existing methods of government go un-answered. But the fiat had gone forth that, with the exception of one or two minor members on the back benches, there was to be no discussion, and it was implicitly obeyed by men who call themselve independent elected representatives.

The girl then tried small stones, which the little one also succeded in swallowing without interfering with its capacity far screaming. The girl's last action had, however, been witnessed, and she was arrested and is now in jail. A doctor safely relieved the child of the stones and it goes on yelling.

Washington are turned toward Chicago. A number of Democratic Senators and members have already started and others will follow all through the week. The press correspondents leave for the convention Friday night. The conviction is now general that nothing can prevent the nomination of President Cleveland. It is even seriously predicted that no other name will be presented to the convention.

"My belief is that Cleveland will be nominated by the Democratic convention, because ne is the choice of the country," said Congressman McKinney, of New Hampshire. "All that stands in his way is the intimation that New York may go against him. This trouble about New York is getting to be tiresome, and the Democratic party should sooner or later adopt some way of relief. I feel certain of success with Cleveland. Mr. Reid notified Typographical Union No. 6 that he had decaded to supplant non-union by union men, and that he was ready to receive from that body the names of men from whom he might select a foreman. The names of some twenty were canvassed in the meeting and three of the most popular were selected. There the matter rested, for neither Mr. Reid nor those whom he leaves in charge of his office during his absence made any reply to the letter contaiving the names of the candidates, any one of whom would be acceptable to union printers.
