In it the lady managers offered their devout thanks for the aid given them by their friends in finding funds for the new building. Special thanks were accorded to Wm. Gooderham and J. were accorded to Wm. Gooderham and J. J. Withrow for the interest they had taken in furnishing the home. They reported that no deaths had occurred in the home during the year, although many of the inmates had suffered from croup and an affliction of the eyes, and for the constant unremitting at tention of Dr. Thorburn they were profoundly thankful. The total number of inmates during the year had been 136, and tes during the year had been 136, and at present there are in the home seventy boys. Fifty-four former inmates of the home are bound as apprentices to farmers antil they attain the age of 18 years. The management had to regret the loss of Mrs. Hodgins and Mrs. Ryerson, both ladies having died during the year. The loss of Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, who had been on the board of management for eighteen years, and who had removed to Montreal was also regretted.

CONSTABLES WITH NEW STAFFS. Their Effect on a Dingy Court Room-Th

The spring civil assizes for the county of York opened yesterday afternoon, Chief Justice Hagarty on the bench. The only noticeable difference from other openings of a similar kind was that each constable had been presented with a brand new shining staff. Even this little tribute of respec tability helped to brighten up the dingy room in the centre of the courthouse where the assizes are held; and his lordship evidently thought, judging from the manner in which he eyed the staffs, that they were the harbingers of the long looked-for courthouse. There are 56 jury and 40 non-jury cases on the list. Lamb v. Walker and Piper v. Comparaint.

should be repealed, seconded by Mr. Ouimet, another conservative. He reviewed the history of the McCarthy act, and said he believed that if the decision of the privy council in the Hodge case had been known last session the dominion pariament would not have attempted to legislate upon this subject. There was no question as to the right of provincial legisatures to legislate in reference to licenses, while the right of the federal parliament to deal with the subject was open to quesion. He quoted from the judgment of the privy council in the Hodge case in which their lordships held that the judgment in the case of Russell v. the Queen did not warrant the construction put upon it by Sir John Macdonald when he intro duced his license act. Therefore there was no longer any "necessity for federal in-

All doubts as to powers of local legislatures in this matter had been removed, and he oped the government would consent to epeal the act of last session. the provinces.

Sir Hector Langevin contended that the decision in the Hodge case did not decide the whole question as to whether the licensing power belonged to the federal or provincial parliaments. Parliament would be stultifying itself by now undertaking to repeal an act of last session. He moved an amendment, seconded by Mr. McLenan, to the effect that the question of the con petence of parliament to pass the lique license act of 1883 should be submitte with all convenient speed to the supreme court or the imperial privy council for de-cision. The house should have confidence in the opinions of those members of the cabinet who were lawyers, but now the government ways asking parliament to yets confidence. were asking parliament to vote confidence in their opinions and to refer the matter t the courts. The proposed amendment did not meet the objection as to the restriction not meet the objection as to the restriction of provincial revenues that would be caused by the putting of the dominion license act in force. This system of assim-ilating all the laws of the provinces was nothing less than legislative union.

Mr. Fleming (reform) recalled the fact that last session he had proposed on the third reading of the license bill, a resoluthird reading of the license bill, a resolu-tion that parliament should not attempt to legislate unfil the question as to its juris-diction over the liquor traffic had been de-cided by the court of last resort. That resolution had been voted down, but now the minister of public works was obliged for propose something, your civil legislate. to propose something very similar. In passing the license act the house had taken up the law from the leader of the government, and had been misled. Now, there should be no hesitation about retroing a step made under such should be no hesitation about re-tracing a step made under such circumstances. But it seemed to be the settled policy of the government to encroach in every pos-sible way upon the legislative powers of the provinces, because now they were found proposing to make an effort to induce the courts by some means to give a decision declaring that the provinces had not the authority that had always been considered to them. The house had con-

Instead of a question of necessity, the maintenance of the license act was now to be made a matter of government policy. This was centralization ment policy. This was centralization against which every true friend of confed-

The provinces had exercised the power of licensing since confederation, and there was no justification for the unconstitutional conduct of Sir John Macdonald in attempting to deprive them of that right unless it was contended that the licensing question could be more properly dealt with by federal burdens because in the provinces the provinces had exercised the power of licensing since confederation, and there was no justification for the unconstitutional conduct of Sir John Macdonald in attempting to early decay will also find in this revitalizing tonic a remedy worth trying. 2-4-6 spirit of the British North America act was that all the power therein relegated to the provinces should be preserved intact and no interference by federal parliament could be permitted without a gross violation of the constitution. He argued at length on the legal and constitutional aspect of the question, contending that the Hodge case decided beyond doubt that the provincial legislature possessed licensing power and there could be no such thing as concurrent jurisdiction in such a matter. The city of St. John was acting under a charter which gave absolute control over licenses to the corporation, and this privilege which had been acted upon for over a hundred years should not be swept away by arbitrary legislation.
