only good Indian is a dead Indian. As for bad whites, the country fairly swarms with them. Why then should there not be two parent races? And yet throughout all phatic than fond. ussion we have had on the question of who was to blame for the rebellion in as if they could not possibly be to blame settle him.

as if they could not possibly be to blame at all, but must be in the right every time.

Joaquin Miller, judging by that poem of his recently published, is thoroughly possessed with and dominated by this identical illusion. In this hasheesh dream of his, as we may call it, he sees Windsor castle "never so gay," and "with all its banners flying;" while a martyr patriot mounts the scaffold, and while his wife flies wildly through the snow, carrying her infant with her, all exposed to the piercing blast. That poem is really one of the most grotesque perversions of facts that ever was penned. Look right down to the bottom of it, and you will find there this idea—that the halfbreed is somehody who, and college that the halfbreed is somehody who, are really of all the virtues, and incapable halfbreed is somehody who, The transactions on the Montreal stock exbimself of doing wrong, is grievously wronged by the white oppressor. When poet and moralist are united in one person, we have a powerful preacher of righteousness, like Johnson or Cowper, for instance. But in this poem Joaquin Miller appears as a moralist gone mad, whatever his merits as a poet may be.

wonder. It finds in the Buffalo Express what it calls "a strange story," regarding one alleged object of Sir John's mission' to England. He is there, so says the Express, to try to get the Imperial government to purchase half the stock of the Canadian Pacific railway, thus relieving the Dominien of that proportion of a very weighty obligation. Arrangements are te be made between London and Ottawa for military works to be erected on the Pacific coast; and the C.P.R. would become a British-Canadian work, in which both the mother country and the colony would have an interest. Most wonderful of all, the Globe closes with this cadence of approval:

A strange story, but circumstantial and perhaps not wholly without foundation. If Sir John could induce the Imperial government to contribute even one-half to the cost of this road, and have the money applied to the relief of Canada without contracting obligations that would render the transaction worse than valueless, the people would for once have something to thank him for. The story may be a little premature, and we should not wonder to see it promptly denied by the organs. But we beg to say most decidedly that if it is not true it cought to be. The importance of the Canadian Pacific to Great Britain in case of a war with Russia is enormous, in fact it case cavealy be exaggerated. The truth it can scarcely be exaggerated. The truth it can scarcely be exaggerated. The truth is that the eld country should have paid at least half the cost of this road from the No. 1 white 96c, No. 2 red January 92to to very beginning-aye, and of the Intercocolonial, too. It is sincerely to be hoped that our Buffalo contemporary is rightly anformed as to Sir John's having had encouragement beforehand, and that the rumour will be confirmed by the event. We may wonder, however, how it happens that an American paper should be the first to give the Canadian public so important a piece of information.

A New Feature of the Liquor Question. That the power to permit the sale of liquor implies the power to prohibit the sale of liquor, is a proposition that appears although there will be no lack of lawyers to argue that it does not. At any rate the privy council's assertion of the right of this province to license the sale of liquor within her own limits, calls up the question of the constitutionality of the Scott act. We may be certain that the dominion government will not fail to extract what consolation they can out of that decision by telling flelegations of prohibitionists who wait upon them that the federal authorities cannot andertake the enforcement of the Scott act, because the control of the liquer traffic bas been taken out of their hands, and that having no right to license they have no right to prohibit. The provincial governments may not admit the correctness of this contention, but whether they do or this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, this contention, but whether they do or dull, corn is 7id, the form of adding to the quiet.

upon them, the constitutionality of the Scott act will be seriously impugned, and a demand for provincial prol legislation will probably arise. Ther seems to be no end to the com this liquor question. It is like the man who drinks too much liquor, very much this one as to the innocent and blameless Metis is destined to melt away before the fierce light of close, matter-of-fact investigation. Mr. Mills may have been more or less to blame some years back; and the same of fir David Maopherson more recently. The party press on one side will keep us daily posted as to the misdoings of the former; while that on the other side may be trusted to do the same kind office for the latter. What seems to be still wanting, however, but what will probably soon be supplied, is a clear and accurate presentment of hard facts, showing where the halfbreeds themselves have been to blame and the share they have had in defeating the best intentions of governments, and bringing on the troubles from which the country has suffered.
