

WHAT CANADA'S POLICY PRIORITIES ARE PERCEIVED TO BE

(Figure 5)

After rating the eleven issues in terms of what priority Canada should attach to each in its foreign policy efforts, respondents were asked to rate what level of priority they perceived the government to be actually attaching to each.

We believe that the key result here is the extent of "congruency" between what Canadians would like their government to be doing, and what they see the government as actually doing.

To show this congruency analysis, we use the following type of graph:

