

With so many stages in the entire process, this CIIPS working paper concentrates on the first: to discuss what is and what soon may be technically possible, and what useful results could be produced for Canada. Touched on more briefly are questions of the particular role for the Department of National Defence. At this stage it is inappropriate to offer more than a few speculative remarks regarding costs or international implications. Those and the other factors are left for further studies.