I heard you.

You asked your uncle for a cent!

If you can't get it from your mother, you shouldn't beg it of another.

You've always been a Croop, but you will now be called a Beggar, too!

Care of the Hair and Nails

For the first year of life a baby's head is usually bathed every day when he is bathed, but after this time the hair is often so long that it takes too long to dry and once a week is often enough to keep the hair in good condition. As the child grows older once in two or three weeks is generally sufficient. The scalp should be washed with soap and water well rubbed into it, using castile soap and warm water; then it should be very thoroughly rinsed in cooler water, and dried by rubbing with the fingers. Drying the hair in the sun is the best plan whenever possible.

Great care should be taken of the child's brush and comb. Each child, of course, should have his own outfit, and both comb and brush should be washed weekly with a few drops of ammonia in water, the brush being shaken thru this water and then rinsed and dried in the sun. The comb should be well washed also and carefully wiped between the teeth. A comb with broad, coarse teeth that are smooth and do not catch in the hair is the best. The brush should not be too stiff, but should have good quality bristles.

It is thought best to cut a child's hair at least once during early childhood, and many persons prefer to give a girl's hair short until she is seven or eight years old. This gives enough for the hair to grow before it has to be put up. If it is worn long it should be kept braided and away from the neck as much as possible.

A foolish idea is often heard of the effect that babies' nails should never be cut, but should be bitten off. This is no reason for doing this. The nails should be kept trimmed with sharp but blunt-pointed scissors, and the skin at the roots of the nails should be gently pressed back by using the corner of a linen towel and later using an orange stick. If the nails are very brittle run well into the roots of the hair, a little white petroleum; a wooden toothpick is a good thing to clean a baby's or a young child's nails with.

The toenails should also receive careful attention and be cut straight across about once each week, after the child has his bath. This will often prevent ingrowing nails, which are so painful and messy times are hard to cure.
