forgot the Marx case for a time.

Events of the past week have followed each other so fast that the whole country is now astounded at the revelations which seemingly connect Marx with the murder of another one of his farm hands—Joe Palm—whose dismembered body was found buried under a rock pile, and holds him responsible for the disappearance of still two other men who have been missing for two years. One of these men is a Polish peddler who made his home with Marx while traveling around here, and the other a young boy who worked for the old man.

"Where's the boy, Gershon?" inquired Old Uncle Billy McGuire, who lives on an adjoining farm.

"Oh, he got tired and said he was going back to Poland," was Marx's laconic reply. The boy was never seen or heard of again in this region.

Then there came a peddler who offered his wares to the farmers around here. He usually stopped with Marx, sleeping on a cot at the foot of the old man's bed. In the evenings he used to go across the road to the house of sors. Marx's only explanation was that they had got tired and had gone away to the Pennsylvania anthracite fields or back to their native lands.

But Joe didn't follow Palm and Ro-decki. He is of an inquisitive nature, and the day before his employer had spread the report that he was going to leave he ran across a mysterious look-ing hole in the old cellar on the Beck-with place. He began to investigate, and unearthed Rodecki's body. It was then that old man Marx fled the coun-

Hadley Hull decided on an official investigation. They came here last Tuesday and went over both farms. A number of suspicious looking places were excavated, but without result.

"I am convinced there are other bodies here," said Sheriff Jackson to a correspondent, "but I fear that if they are ever found it will be by accident. We will keep up the search, however, until we find the bodies or are satisfied that they have been taken elsewhere."

men is Joe String, who believes that he surely would have filled a crude grave had it not been for his fortunate and timely discovery of Rodecki's body. Marx's trial will begin some time during the term of the superior court of New London County, which opens at New London next week. State's Attorney Lucas said:
"I am confident we have sufficient evidence to convict Marx of Rodecki's murder. From what I have learned of the case by personal investigation I am confident that the old man had one if not two accomplices. Whether we will ever be able to indict them I cannot say."

Marx will be represented at his trial by John C. Cune, a young Harvard graduate, who says that his client has told him a story that will startle the state and result in his acquittal. Marx and his wife have never seen each other since their imprisonment at Norwich. Mrs. Marx went to bed the spoken a word to any one since. Several times she has tried to kill herself and is now under strict surveillance. Marx does not seem to realize his position. He has not been told of the finding of Palm's body. He will talk freely on any subject, but will not mention his own case. He readily consented to pose for his photograph in the jail yard to-day when promised a dozen oranges. Very little is known of the old man's early history. He is said to have had four wives and to be the father of twenty-seven children.

while traveling around here, and the other a young boy who worked for the old man.

There is no more beautiful country in New England than Bastern Connecticut. Until a few years ago it was peopled with descendants of those who had settled here both before and after the Revolution. Farms had been in the ownership of single families for years. Then the old people began to die out and the property was left to make their homes in the cities.

About this time there came a large influx of Foles into the community, who began to purchase farms here and there. One of those who drifted this way seven years ago was Gershon B. Marx.. Where he came from no one knows. He says that he was direct from England and Wales, where, as he expressed it, "I can prove that I was one of the best men that ever left the country." Marx purchased for cash the dld Behenzer Abele farm of 110 acres, on the Chestnut Hill pike, three miles from the village. With his wife, Diana—only half his own age—he settled down to farming and selling milk from his seven cows to the Colchesier creamery. This brought in a comfortable income, and Gershon Marx came to be looked upon a sone of the best men of the Polish community.

Began to Hire Hands.

As the farm prospered there came a need of farm hands, and Marx was wont to engage help from time to time of the rounting hands, and Marx was wont to engage help from time to time of the rounting hands, and Marx was wont to engage help from time to time of the rounting hands and mary and the property was left to grant from the village. Then there came a peddler who of fered his wares to the farmers around here. He usually stopped with Marx, sleeping on a cot at the foot of the old man's bed. In the evenings he used to go across the road to the house of Louis Grollman, where he read the papers. The night before he disappeared he was at Grollman's house, he said nothing about going away.

Mrs. Grollman went to Marx's house bright and early the next morning, ""Where's the peddler, Gershon?" asked Mrs, Grollman.

"Gone. Went away this morning," replied Gershon.

"That's tsrange. It's a wonder he wouldn't tell his friends good-by," said Mrs. Grollman.

It is the bodies of the boy and the peddler that Sheriff Jackson believes are buried somewhere on one of the two farms that Marx tilled, and Capt. Jackson's deputies are now digging for.

Joe Palm and Powel Rodecki followed the boy and the peddler. They, too, dropped out of sight in the same mysterious manner as did their predecessors. Marx's only explanation was that they had got tired and had gone away the same are to the farmers around for the traveled in true grand ducal luxury.

How he will be reduced to some minor post in the official staff somewhere outside of the actual war area. It cannot be imagined that his services will be of the slightest value in any post, but the face of the czar's disreputable kinsman may thus be saved. Boris himself in an interview after he abandoned his luxurlous train at Okoulovska told a French journalist that General Kuropatkin had sent him to St. Petersburg to congratulate the czar on the birth of his son in behalf of the Russian army, and for rest. This aristocratic warrior's view of the campaign seemed to have been chiefly o

Joe String was Marx's next employe. He worked hard for his master for six months, and in April last demanded his pay. The old fellow put him off for a day. He said to the neighbors: "Isn't it too bad, Joe's going to leave me to-night."

THE FOOD AND THE FIGHT

Who are these little heroes that stand ten days in the firing line? No sleep, no rest, and the word is still "up and at them." Are they men or gods? They are the little iron Japs with every nerve and muscle built up from pure CEREAL food. The big, beeffed Russ is simply "not in it." This war settles once and for ever the superiority of cereal toods over all others. If you won't eat LIFE CHIPS yourself, supply them to your children that they may have a fair show in the battle of life.

Every Street Car carries its burden to the Fair Grounds to-day and all the Town celebrates
