APRIL.—"Lambs will use cows milk as profitably as any other farm live-stock," says Mr. J. A. Craig. In an experiment for the purpose of testing the value of this method, the lambs were taken from the ewes at ten days old. They were fed from a dipper and not by the bottle, the latter method being too expensive. The greatest trouble after they have learned to drink is to prevent them from taking too much at a time. Only warm sweet and fresh milk should be used; when two weeks old they should never be given at one time more than half a pint. Under this treatment, young lambs thrive, and the transaction, even calculating the milk at its highest value, is a most profitable one,
