WAR AND PRACE.

(Daily Sun, Dec. 25.4) of its predecessors, finds war in progress in various parts of the earth, while all the powers are in training for future hostilities. Never were the armies of the world much larger than they are now, and never were the navies so large. The science and art of war is taught by atl the nations. Every country recognizes the fact that her future independence rests upon the military strength that can be found to defend her frontier. Back of all international law and of all diplomacy, are armed men, and battleships, without which there is no sanction to any decisions. This is how far the world has got in nineteen hundred years after the birth of Christ.

And it might be worse. It is better to fight for a cause than to gain it by bribery, or by falsehood, or by treachery. One great poet taught us that loud war by land and sea was not the worst thing that could befall a nation. Men facing each other in fair fight in Africa are more generous enemies than those who in the struggler of business life unfairly and cruelly drive their rivals to bankruptcy, to the alms house, to suicide, or to helpless despair The peace of the gospel is violated in the daily transactions of business life professional life, public life, industrial and spoial life as much as it is in the battlefield.

Yet everywhere there prevails more or less the law of love and sacrifice In the camp, the battlefield, the military hospital, as much as anywhere we find it. There is more charity among the soldiers than in the ranks of the peace at any price men who

While we see great capitalists gathering in fortunes such as Croesus was $1,000 more than the provincial Says the Soldiers Who Go to S recognizing, as rich men never did before, the obligation to share their gains with the people at large. Along with Carnegie fortunes come the Carnegie benefactions. We see the same man who devoted the first part of his life to the study of methods to accumulate money now devoting his time and thought to the problem of spending this money for the good of other people. We find in Canada the richest of our manufacturers devising methods on a great scale for the industrial education of Canadian youth. Not less is the spirit shown now, as it always has been, in the devotion wherewith men of learning and power have given the world the advantage of their years of study and research and of their skill of hand and brain. The pauper can obtain free the medical and surgical skill and knowledge for which the monarch and millionaire are willing to pay princely fees, and which all the wealth of Kimberley could not buy twenty years ago. In cities at least the poorest householder is welcome to read all the best books in his language. The inventor invents for the multitude. The poet sings for all. The poor have the gospel preached to them. And all about us charities large and small, public and private, testify to man's love and thought for his fellow man.

MR. FRASER'S CHALLENGE.

Hon, D. C. Fraser wants someone to tell him of any charges, of improper expenditure or boodling ever made in the public accounts committee or in the house during the present adminis-tration. His attention might be directed to the Manitoba election trial scandal, the emergency scandal, the pur-Soulange canal contract scandals, the cement scandal, the Domville scandal, cows, the one concerning the Ottawa militia clothing contracts.

A BAD SHOWING.

We ask the attention of the people of New Brunswick to the statemen of the provincial auditor genera which is printed in this paper. It is, so far as it goes, a statement of the provincial accounts for the year ending with October last. We say so far as it goes because the auditor general he might have added that it does not health or any part of the outlay for were here in the middle of October. But without these the expenditure is account was $756,514. This only means that the government spent for the ordinary services of the province the more. Besides this the minister borrowed $200,000 to pay for steel bridges, which service is not included in the ordinary revenue.

It is true that the revenue for the year is stated to be $1,033,266. But this includes the $275,692 received from the dominion in settlement of the old Eastern Extension railway claim. This of course is not properly a part of the regular receipts of the year. It is an amount of capital received, and might properly have been made to pay for the steel bridges. What really has happened is that the government drew this $275,692 and has already used $155,000 of it to meet what would otherwise have been the deficit of the year. The items which the auditor general mentions as yet to be handed in will probably clean out the other $120,000. The sum of the affair will then be that the government has used up in one year all the money received from ordinary sources. together with the whole of the Eastern Extension award, and has issued bonds for $200,000 to pay for bridges. Thus the province will end the year with $275,000 less assets and $200,000 greater liabilities than when the year began. This additional liability does not include the items, probably over $100,000, which the auditor has yet to furnish.

This serious state of affairs is not the result of a loss of revenue. The federal subsidy is a constant quantity. A larger sum than usual was received from stumpage and other territorial revenues. From this source $200,000 was obtained, whereas in the previous year the sum was only $175,000, and Mr. Tweedie's estimate for the year inder review was only $185,000. There was a loss in succession duties, nearly equal to the gain in territorial, so that the total revenue was only $3,000 short of the previous year's figures, while it

The shortage is due to excessive expenditure. In 1900 the outlay was $794,476. In 1901 it was $910.345, with several matters to hear from. That is the ghastly story of Mr. Tweedie's financing. Some of these results will not be surprise, because Mr. Tweedie anounced them in his estimates. He expected to have only $150,000 left out of his Eastern Extension award. That is, he prepared the public, when the say that, as in the formation of our year was half gone, for the fact that first contingents, patriotism counted $125,000 of the capital sum would be needed to pay the regular bills of the year. But he has already spent $155, 000 of it, with the emergency expenditure on roads, the reception bills, and the health bills still to be paid. Instead of $150,000 left he had only $120,000, every dollar of which has probably been paid out since to meet the deferred bills. Mr. Tweedie has spent twice as much for game preservation as he expected. Strange to say his interest bills were $12,000 more than his estimate, though one would suppose that this element could be exactly foreseen. The immigration expenditure has grown from $6,000 to $10,000, and is $2,000 more than Mr. Tweedle thought it would be. The results of the increased payments are not as yet obvious, and it is said that a large part of the outlay is contained in the cost of an expensive handbook, the whole issue of which is now piled up in some obscure place at Fredericton because the work was found unfit for circulation. Among the other items which Mr. Tweedle did not foresee was a payment of $2,016 for collecting succession duties. This neat rake-off chase of supplies for the marine department, the Yukon telegraph construction bills, the Edmonton bridge paid for collecting duties. This neat rake-off which makes a snug addition to Mr. Pugsley's salary, seems to have been struction bills, the Edmonton bridge paid for collecting duties amounting to scandal, the three or four dredging $12,079. The attorney general was not scandals, the Cornwall canal and the only comrade who gave the premier a had surprise. He had another from his former colleague, Mr. A. S. the scandal concerning. Mr. Killam's White. No estimate was made for the revision of the statutes, in which park fence, and the one concerning work the ex-attorney general may by countesy be supposed to be engaged. But the province had up to the end of (Special to the Sun.) SYDNEY, Cape I Sig. In an interview on his return with the Sun's correspendent, Signor Marconi said he was avorably impressed with one or two the sites looked over, particularly able Head, at Glace Bay.

Two of these points are Northern Head, Port Morien, and Mainadieu, where in both cases the line of communication will be an uninterrupted one, save for a small portion of Newfoundland territory, which will not interfere materially. "The station to be erected here," said Signor Marconi will be a permanent one, but just where it will be placed will not be decided upon until the sites that could possibly suit are carefully examined. The station at Cape Breton will be for the use of Canada, and that at Cape Cod for the United States. Both
