

Poetry
STANZAS.
 (From the Church of England Journal.)
 Mourn not for the dead, who sleeping rest at last
 Mourn not for those who linger—weeping 'er a fatal fate.
 All who live and all who love
 Have graves to weep above;
 Mourn not for the quiet sleeper,
 But rather for the weeper.
 Mourn not for the hearts which broken
 Have slumber found;
 Mourn not for the words which spoken
 Have ceased to wound.
 Mourn for the sorrow, which to-day
 As a sword doth smite and slay—
 For the wild woe and the woe,
 Coming time must know.
 All the past hath found fruition,
 In an unknown home,
 Dim and faint this earth's station
 For that time to come;
 But be sure that God above
 Takes his from this earth's love,
 And with Him—through dark the way—
 There is rest again.
 And as though from the ocean,
 Through good or ill,
 The ship in constant motion
 Windsward still,
 So let us, though to present eye
 Unseen those distant shores,
 Forget not heaven's safe and sure
 On the far coast to steer.
 Let us press onward—sailing
 For that time to come;
 Not to the home which is waiting
 Those gone before.
 Mourn for the mourners—do not for those
 Beyond all human joys or woes,
 Their slumber is as calm as deep,
 We only wake to weep.
