The Luck of the Haggerty's.

By Eben E. Rexford.

Mrs. Cranford was in the garden at work among her flowers. All at once she became aware that a little girl was leaning over the fence, watching her with very wide-open and interested eyes. 'Good morning,' sho said, pleasantly. 'Do you like flowers, little girl?' 'Like 'em? Oh, ma'am, it's love 'em I do,' was the quick reply. 'Your garden makes me think of Heaven, ma'am. I think I'd never get tired of it.' 'Do you grow any flowers in your garden?'

asked Mrs. Cranford 'In our garden?' The little girl had to op and chu kle over so preposterous an idea. 'Why, ma'am, we haven't any. We live away up clo e to the sky, seems to ma, metimes, when I get tired climbing the stairs to get there. Oh no, ma'am, we never had a garden; but there's nothing I'd like better. Maybe,' with sudden hopefulness, 'maybe I'll have one, semetime. If I do, I'll have all the flowers you've got here, an' lots more. Oh, ma'am, wouldn't it ba pice if I could?' 'I hope you will have,' said Mrs. Cranford, noticing what a bright, intelligent face the girl had. 'I'm sure flowers would grow for you. They know who loves them.

'If lovin' would make 'em grow I'd have the nicest flowers anybody ever saw,' said the girl, with a laugh that had the sound of a great longing in it. 'We kaven't one lower, you know. I come round this way going to school an' comin' from it, just to look at your garden, ma'am. I really do think I enjoy it as much as you do, ma'am, ust lookin' at it over the fence, an' wishin'

had one like it.' 'Would you like a plant?' asked Mrs. Cranford. 'I'm going to take some of these up and pot them to-day, and you may have any one you like, if you'll take good care of oad smile of delight. 'You don't how glad I'll be to have one!" me, and I'll have it ready for you. What they sind out to the haythen. You know any of these plants. They're geraniums, and they're very easy to grow.' 'I think I'll take that one, ma'am, if it's prodigy of general knowledge by her father It think I'll take that one, ma'am, it it's and the boys.

That's it,' said her father. 'That's j'at lant with a cluster of brilliant scarlet blosoms on it. 'That looks so cheerful-like, That's a good reason for choosing it,' sai Mrs. Cranford. 'It is a cheerful flower. If you treat it well, it will blossom all Winter

I'll tell you how to take care of it when you ome after it.' 'There goes the first bell,' cried the girl. I'll have to be goin'. But I'd like to stay here all day, an' watch you. May be, ma'am, I could help you, sometimes. I'd be glad to do it, to pay for the plant. 'We'll see about that by and by,' said Mrs. Granford. 'I don't want any pay for them go to those who haven't any, and reg'lar, an' now an' thin they come out wid would be glad to get them.' Shortly after the afternoon ses school closed, she presented herself at the 'I've had my head full of geraniums the whole day, ma'am,' she laughed. 'I do believe the plant's noddin' to me! Maybe it knows that it's goin' to live with me. Do you s'pose it does?' 'It may,' answered Mrs. Cranford.

Plants know a good deal more than some people give them credit for, I think. Then she told Maggie how to take care of I'll remember it all,' she said, nodding her head wisely. 'You see if I don't' Mrs. Cranford wrapped a newspaper about the pot, and handed the plant to its proud said Maggie, as she held the geranium up close to her face in a caressiog way. 'Now I'll be runnin' home to mother to show her what a p'endid present I've had made me, and away ran the little girl.

It was a dingy old tenement house to which she bore her flower. Away up four lights of rickety old stairs she climbed, and here she found the rooms which she called ome. Her mother was at work in one of hem, over a steaming wash-tub. She ooked up as Maggie came in like a small cyclone, and her face brightened at sight of he geranium. 'Where did ye git that now?' she asked. Sure an' it's a jew'l of a posy.' 'Isn't it?' cried Maggie, her eyes sparking with pleasure. 'A lady who has lots of flowers gave it to me. She said it would have blossoms all Winter, if I took good care of it. She said it ought to have lots of light' The little girl looked at the window.

Not much light could come through the dir-'l'il be after washin' the windy a bit,' said Mrs. Baggerty. 'It's too bad to be puttin' sich an illigant plant in that dirty place.' Maggie put the plant on its sill, and stood back to observe the effect.

'It makes the room look like a bit of gar den,' said Maggie. 'I wonder if fither an' the boy's 'll notice it without telling them?' 'We'll see,' answered Mrs. Haggerty. 'I eclare, I'll be givin' the whole place a scruboin'. The cl'anin' o' the windy ma'es the lirt show that plain that I'm ashamed to ook at it. If we're gittin' that stylish that we kape plants in the windy like bigbuge, we'll have to be afther slickin' up a little, I'm thinkiu',' said Mrs. Haggerty laughing. The flower had already begun its good work Maggie always had to set the table for upper, and she went about her work with

'They're comin',' cried Maggie, precently. Now we'll see what they'll de. Dennis and Mike came tumbling into the coom, boy fashion, and Mr. Eaggerty followed with less noise and confusion.

At first, none of them noticed any change in the room. All at once Mike spied the 'I say now, but that's a dandy,' he exclaimed. 'Where'd it come from?' 'Maggie got it give to her,' answered Mrs.

Haggerty. 'Ain't it foine?' 'I sh'd say,' responded Mike. 'How'd ye like the looks o' that Denny?' 'I like it,' answered the quieter brother, and his face was full of admiration. Mr. Haggerty had discovered it by this time, and he struck an attitude of genuine Irish delight 'It se's the room out illigant.' he declared.

The neighbors 'll be sayin' we're puttin' on stoyle, I'm thinkin'.' There now! That's the very thing I was sayin' to Maggie,' declared Mrs. Haggerty.

'An' do yez be seein' anything else about the place, James?' 'The windy looks a good bit cl'aner,' answered her husband, with a laugh, 'Soap an' water make a dale o' dif'rence in the look o' things, don't they?' 'Thrue for ye,' answered his wife. 'An' I'm goin' to see what they'll do for the rist o' the place. I niver noticed how the house looked till afther I'd scrubbed the windy, an' let the light in so that I can see the dirt that thick that I do belave one c'd be scrap-in' it off wid a knife.' It was strange, but the little flower in the window seemed, from the moment of its arival, to exert a refining influence over she Haggertys. It made them feel the force of the contrast between itself and its surroundings, and unconsciously they began to live up to the flower. The next day Mrs. Haggerty gave the place the threatened 'going-over.' Mr. Haggerty and the boys were surprised. 'It looks swate an' cl'ane if it hasn't got illigant furniture,' said Mr. Haggerty. 'L do belive it's a good thing you bro't the posy home wid ye, Maggie. I'm thinkin' i's goin' to be one o' thim what-d'y-call-'ems shall it be? You can have your choice of wat I've in moind, Maggie—I niver c'd 'I guess you're thinkin' of a missionary,' answered Maggie, who was considered a > what the blissed plant makes me think of. And the geranium in the window was a issionary to the family. It began by reaching a silent little sermon about cleanness. 'The clean room made it seem inconfeet to be its occupants. Before long they got to combing their hair regularly, greatly to the surprise of Mrs. Haggerty. mauners are contagious, and she, not to be outdone by her husband or the boys, got to > giving her own hair a 'slick' each afternoon. 'They're puttin' on airs,' declared Mrs. O'Taole to her sister, Mrs. Flannigan. 'Do yez be noticin' the b'ys, lately? They've took to wearin' necktoies ev'ry Sunday th' rale big-bugs do. An' Missus Haggerty, she's afther scrubbin' the flure two times the wake, an' I can rimimber when it didn't git it wanst a month.'

> Mrs. Flannigan thought it advisable to call on Mrs. Haggerty and satisfy herself as to what these changes meant.

T've heard some quare hints about yes, she said to her old neighbor. 'Some o' the folks do be afther insiniwatin' that yez be gittin' stook up, an' tryin' to swing stoyle, an' the like o' that ' 'Hear that, now!' cried Mrs. Haggerty.

Stoyle indade! Does this look like toyle, I'd like to know?' with a glance about the room. 'All there is to it is that since that blissid geraynioom in the windy came, we've scrubbed the flure, an' our faces, an' tried te make things pleasanter for the dear little thing. We're gittin' to see that it don't pay to live like pigs when it costs no more to live like folks. It's the truth I'm tellin' yez, Mary Flannigan, that p'ant's the luck o' the fam'ly, for the b'ys an' all the rist of us have changed so much since we got it that we hardly feel like the same folks. My husband's afther thinkin' he's goin' to git a a new job, an' he sez to me las' night, scz he, 'If I do, Biddy, it'll all be on account o' the luck the plant in the windy brought. 1 m gittin' to be proud o' the b'ys, sez l.e. for they do be behavin' like gintlemin, an' that's goin' to help us git the job. The plant's did it. It's a blessid little mission. ary, sez he.'

The hoped for job was secured, and great was the rejoicing in the Haggerty family

'I do think we'll be afther celebratin' a little,' said Mr. Haggerty, as he brought home the biggest and fattest turkey to be cooked in honor of the event, And when the table was spread, and they all sat down to the feast in clean clothes, and with bright happy faces, Maggie brought the geranium and set it in the center of the table and 'It's one of us, an' I know it's glad be. cause of our good luck, and we want it to enjoy our dinner with us, even if it can't eat

'Bliss its swate soul,' said Mr. Haggerty, nodding at the plant as if he felt sure it could understand all he was saying -as perhaps it did-'if anything 'nd happen to it I'd fale as if we'd lost one of the fam'ly. That's right, Maggie, darlin', its brouget the good luck to us, an' we won't forgit in When we git moved, I'll buy it in illig nt pot, an' if it don't care for turkey we'l he afther treatin' it to some tesh dirt fom the woods, an' we'll give if a windy to grow in that'll make it this its got into a rele
