Editor's Talk

CANADA startled the world in general and itself in particular at the general election held last Thursday. Reciprocity with the United States was defeated. As an incident in the reciprocity campaign the Government was defeated and probably before this reaches our readers a new government will be formed. Many familiar figures have disappeared from the field of parliamentary action, and many new men have entered the arena. The portraits of a few of the victors appear in this week's issue, and those of the newer victors will appear from time to time. The pictorial side of the new political era will be carefully taken care of in these pages.

Last week's discussion of the ethics of baseball has attracted considerable attention, and next week we hope to return to the subject. Several baseball experts have promised to join in a discussion which seems worth while.

* * *

R. E. Cox opens up a question in this week's issue which will interest all financiers and investors. Canada has combines and mergers and trusts. The regulation of mergers and trusts becomes a more vital problem day by day. Any person having ideas along this line is invited to contribute his quota.

Mr. James Ross, the millionaire ex-president of the Dominion Coal Co., contributes a letter to this issue which is also interesting to the same class of readers.

Next week our Country Life Supplement will be a feature of the issue. The problem of the country home and the suburban home is broad and complex. Canada is essentially a land of homes, and it is only by keeping the people's attention fixed upon this fact that we may hope to avoid slums, congested districts and the apartment house evil.
