NEWS RIGHT UP TO DATE

HOW THE LAW IS EVADED IN SOME PLACES.

Conducting boxing matches nowadays in this country is no longer as simple as it used to be. When the laws against pugilism were not so stringent as they are at present, all that promoters of fistie clubs had to do in the past, especially when the sport flourished in New York State, was to locate two men, name a date for the bout, and place tickets on sale. It is public record to witness the encounter, all they had to do was to wait up to the contest they tickets and enter the building. Now in some cities it is quite different, instead of being formal, any one has to go through a long and tedious process, because the authorities, especially in Boston and Baltimore and a few other cities, insist that the law be strictly observed.

In Baltimore and Boston bouts are held just the same as if they were simple affairs. In fact, the rounds are fought in a regular manner, and there are a few drawbacks which occasionally make it uncomfortable for the prospective spectators as well as for the managers of the club. In Baltimore, although there is no positive law against boxing in the streets, the police insist that all matches must be run under the guise of an athletic entertainment. If this is not complied with the police have the power to refuse the necessary license, and generally do so unless everything is just as they desire.

The Eureka Athletic Club is the foremost boxing club in Baltimore. Its manager is George W. Waddell, and its promoter is the backer of Joe Gans, the lightweight champion, and Young Peter Jackson, practically the only prominent sporting man in the town.

"Contests of skill," as bouts in that city are called, take place in a hall, and the police are not allowed to be present. In the first place, no tickets are sold. Those who wish to witness the combats must be present at the time, and they are not allowed to be present in the gallery, and those who are present are not allowed to be present in the gallery.

DUNDAS FIREMEN DISSATISFIED.

Want to be Paid for Attending False Alarms. Reorganization of the Department is Probable.

REORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT IS PROBABLE.

Dundas, Jan. 21.—The town firemen think they are not fairly dealt with by the town authorities. They do not take kindly to the proposal of Chairman Moss, of the Fire and Water Committee to reduce their number, and another more strenuous kick is against the rule that gives them no pay when they are called out by a false alarm. They are paid for each fire that they are called out to, but of late months they have had some long and hard runs in response to false alarms. They claim that they should be paid in such cases. Just what the Council will do in order to satisfy the brigade remains to be seen. The reorganization of the department is being discussed, and another, or perhaps two more horses provided, and at the same time such arrangements may be made that will satisfy the members.
