"Circumstances alter cases." is a wise old "Circumstances after cases," is a wise of a case which still is good and useful in spite of its age, and astutely leaves the answer of the problem of whether a man should marry on $15 a week to the individual bride and groom with their individual circumstances of tastes and character. These apart

stances of tastes and character. These apart it is impossible to judge. With them it is well-nigh impossible. A tidy home body of a girl who loves her needle can work miracles, making money by saving it. Some girls, indeed, are so possessed with this sort of thing that they have estranged their husbands by preferring to sit by the fire and spin on a rainy day instead of investing some pennies on an evening's diversion. Others are for butter-flying all the time and sew not at all. Others sew only when they cut out now cloth. Mon differ like unto them. Everything all the wide world over is relative—relative to the viewpoint and the viewer and the view of the viewpoint and the viewer and the wide world over its relative—relative to the viewpoint and the viewer and the view of th ted for the struggle will reap only regret and discontent.

There is but one way to manage upon a small income; rigidly to apportion income to expense. leaving a margin which is not to be touched save in case of dire necessity; and never to run in debt.

Micawber's famous formula: "Income, $100, expenditure $95, result happiness! Income, $20, expenditure $20.01, result misery." ought to be framed and presented to every couple who marry upon a small incomes.

The two who venture to marry oil $15, a week must be prepared to dispense with most of the luxuries of ordinary life. If they put their hands to the plough there must be no locking back. It requires far less courage to marry upon $15 a week far less courage to marry upon $15 a week than cheerfully and bravely to accept the consequences of the act.
