CHAPTER XXVII.
A PROPOSAL.

"No!" he pleaded, his voice music itself, his manner full of devotion; "let it remain, Edna, if only till you have heard. You shall take it from me then—if you have the heart! Edna, if you but knew how I have looked forward to this moment, with what mingled torture and delight, of head and hope—yes, for I have in some sanguine moments dared to hope—you would pity me! I think," he continued, putting his hand to his forehead, with a nervous gesture, "I am sure that you never have undergone what I have endured these last three months, for I have not only battled with a passion that has conquered and rent me, but I have suffered the anguish of knowing that the woman I loved was perhaps passing from me forever. Oh, Edna, if you could but know how the scant tidings of you that reached me—how they tore my heart in twain! God! how I have suffered! But—I did not wish to speak of that—it escaped me unaware. I wanted to tell you that I have come to you to-night to know my fate. I have come, Edna, to take my life's happiness at your hands—or a life's misery. What can I say?—the grandest words that poet ever uttered would sound poor and insignificant, compared with the love I bear for you. I can only say that one short sentence, so full of terrible meaning for me—I love you, Edna! I love you as never man loved yet! Ah! for with a sudden force Edna released her hand, and clenching it tightly, pressed it against her side. "Edna, you must hear me! Do not speak yet! I know what you will

And the Worst is Yet to Come...

"You—you—knew it!" faltered Edna.

"Yes," he said, his voice shaking and breaking; "I know more. Edna, be brave, be strong, and I will tell you all!"

She pressed her hand to her bosom, and leaned against the corner of the window.

"I am strong."

"Can you bear it?" he asked, clutching at her dress. "Can you—can you?"

"Go on," she said, almost inaudibly.

"When did you find it out?"

"Five weeks ago. Edna, I have been to Lucerne, I have been to Basle; I have seen the register—I know all. You cannot tell me that there is anything between us now!"

Her eyes closed, and a shudder ran through her frame; she motioned him to continue.

"Edna, why have you concealed it all this time? Was it because you thought he had deceived you, and done you a grievous wrong? If so, you are misled. The marriage was as valid as any that ever was made. You are his wife—you are Lady More!"

Edna stared with dazed eyes that saw nothing.

"His wife—yes, I know it. Where is he? Oh, if you knew," and she bent down toward him with outstretched hands, "tell me—tell me! Where is he? Let me go to him! It is too long—too long! We have been apart so long!"

Her feet turned white.

"Edna," he said, hoarsely, "what does this mean? You know that Sir Cyril More is dead—"

She shook her head, like some dumb creature in pain.

"Not him! I do not think of him, but of my husband!" and at the sacred word she hid her face in her hands.

"Your husband!" he repeated. "Was not Cyril More your husband? You were married to Cyril More, at Basle, for I have seen the register—have traced him back to the same hotel with you, and found him under the disguise of Harold Payne!"

With a gasp, as if for breath, Edna staggered forward. He sprang to his feet, and caught her in his arms.

"Edna—my Edna!—my darling! be strong, be brave! Listen!—they will hear you—they will know all! Oh, my darling—my poor darling!" and he bent his head to press a passionate kiss upon her white lips; but with a violent shudder Edna came back to life—drawn back, as it were, by her danger, and putting up her hand, wrenched herself from his embrace. Then, white, trembling and panting, like some hunted stag that has turned to bay, she confronted him.

"Is—this a lie? Do not speak! No, I see it in your face—it is true! Oh, God!" and she covered her face with her hands for a moment, but the next mastered her anguish and turned upon him again—"and knowing this—knowing this, you came to me to offer me your love; you came to insult me—a wife—a widow of three months, with the story of your passion! Oh, God! if I were but a man to strike you! Do not touch me! Your love! You do not know what love means! Oh! if you knew, if you could but guess how I hate and loathe you as you kneel there!"

With an oath he sprang to his feet, and stood before her with clinched hands and white face.

"Is this what you have to say to me? Is this how you treat my love; how you reward me for all the tenderness I have poured out upon you; all the devotion with which I have hung upon your footsteps? Edna, beware! Such love as mine is like a two-edged sword; it cuts both ways. Accept it or refuse it, it must make itself felt! Edna, you will not spurn me! You dare not!"

She looked at him with tightened lips.

"Dare not!" she whispered, almost inaudibly.

"No! you dare not! My love would turn to hate, and destroy you! I am no weak fool to be turned aside by a slight word. I have sworn to win you, and I will do it. Foolish girl!" he hissed, grasping her arm and bending toward her. "Do you forget that I hold your good name in my hands? How will you explain that clandestine marriage that assumed name? His long silence? How could you endure the shrugs and the sneers of the world that has been at your feet? I come to you and offer you a haven of escape—refuse to accept it, and I will raise the storm that shall wreck you! Edna, you shall, you must, yield!"

She looked at him, white and speechless, the fascination was creeping over her. She felt a tightening at her throat, a singing in her ears; the murmur of the voices from the other room came dimly to her as if they were miles away; and through it all she saw the man she had loved—oh, God! the man who had died and whom she would never see more!—as he had stood beside her that summer morn when he had called her "wife!"

The man by her side bent down and whispered:

"Edna, forgive me! I am mad tonight! My love has changed me to I know not what! You will not say no! Think! Sit down here quietly and think! You cannot doubt my love—you know that you are in my power—you dare not—oh! what do I say? What need is there to use such force when you will take pity on me and come of your own accord? See, darling, rest here for a few moments while I go to them—I hear them talking—stay here till I come back to you and think—think!"

He pressed her hand to his lips again as he finished and left her. No sooner had he gone than the spell seemed removed. With a suppressed cry of alarm and terror, Edna sprang to her feet and looked round as if for escape. Instinctively her hands went up to the window, she unfastened the clasp and softly opened the door; then unhesitatingly, although the snow lay thick upon the ground, she threw the curtain aside with a quick, trembling hand and glided out into the night.

Household Notes.

The regulating foods are water, green vegetables and fruits; also minerals and vitamins.

Leftover shredded fish can be combined with macaroni and tomato sauce into a delicious pie.

Gingerbread pudding may have added raisins or currants and be baked in individual tins.

Rice may be cooked in the ordinary way, with raisins in it, and then served with boiled custard.

For a one-plate dinner, a combination of Hamburg cakes with macaroni and bananas is excellent.

To cut meringue-topped pies easily, section the meringue carefully with a knife before browning.

A delicious salad is made with hominy, diced celery and green peppers, marinated with French dressing.

Dates stuffed with walnuts and baked, being basted with butter and a little water, become very delicious.

Odd and delicious tarts are made of pastry piecrust filled with dates, pineapple and chopped almonds plus sugar and spices.

An old saying was "the larger the loaves the better the bread," but the modern breadmaker changes it to "the smaller the loaves, etc."

Ends Stubborn Coughs in a Hurry

For real effectiveness, this old home-made remedy has no equal. Easily and cheaply prepared.

You'll never know how quickly a bad cough can be conquered, until you try this famous old home-made remedy. Any one who has coughed all day and all night, will say that the immediate relief given is almost like magic. It takes but a moment to prepare, and really there is nothing better for coughs.

Into a 16-oz. bottle, put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth); then add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Either way, this mixture saves about four-fifths of the money usually spent for cough preparations, and gives you a more positive, effective remedy. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant—tastes like licorice.

You can feel this take hold instantly, soothing and healing the membranes in all the air passages. It promptly loosens a dry, tight cough, and soon you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear. Children's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and it is also splendid for bronchitis, croup, whooping cough, and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known as the most reliable remedy for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded.

SIR EDGAR BOWRING LUNCHEON.
LONDON, March 14.
(Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)
The hope that Great Britain would ever hand over her maritime rights to any League of Nations, was expressed by Sir Edgar Bowring, Newfoundland High Commissioner, at a luncheon tendered him by the British Empire League. The Commissioner's speech on Britain's invaluable services in the war and referred to the work done by the men of the Newfoundland Contingent, men whose quality was unexcelled. He stated that the Newfoundland Government was arranging to settle returned soldiers on the land and emphasized the importance of an improved Atlantic service and cheaper rates. He said that the development of Newfoundland was proceeding rapidly, especially in water power in the fishing industry were being replaced by more modern methods which would have an enormous effect on it. The policy of Newfoundland, said the Commissioner, was "back to the sea," instead of "back to the land," and in this connection development of fish, transport and cold storage was of the utmost importance.

JAPS AND U. S. MARINES CLASH.

PEKING, March 14.
(By the A.P.)—American marines have raided the Japanese concession at Tien Tsin forcing their way into the Japanese Consulate and assaulting the Consul, according to despatches received here. The trouble is said to have been caused by the rough treatment given American soldiers who became disorderly in the Japanese quarters of the city. Japanese soldiers drove out the Americans with fixed bayonets, it is said, wounding two of them quite seriously. The next day two hundred angry marines, who were off duty, paraded through the Japanese concession and it is alleged they attacked every Japanese encountered. When the marines reached the Consulate they forcibly entered, it is reported, and assaulted the Consul, whose injuries are understood to be serious. The Consular body is deliberating on measures to be taken to restore normal conditions. It is said that feeling is running high in Tien Tsin.
