The Heir of Bayneham

—AND—
Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"The resemblance is accidental," said Mr. Fulton, "but it is certainly very strong; yet the person of whom I speak was not a lady."

"The false, mean words did not blister his face, smiling lips. In all that constitutes a perfect lady, his dead wife, Magdalen Hurst, was certainly one."

"Shall we proceed to business?" asked Lord Bayneham hastily. He was beginning to feel somewhat annoyed at this handsome stranger, who stood so admirably before his wife's portrait; besides, he did not like to hear that there had ever been another face like hers—it was peerless in his eyes.

They entered warmly into their arrangements, and Lord Bayneham's passing annoyance soon wore off.

There was no resisting the handsome face, and gay, easy temper. Paul Fulton knew how to charm, and he soon won the liking of the noble, unsuspecting earl. He accepted with skilfully concealed delight the invitation to Bayneham Castle; it was the very thing that in his heart, he had longed for, but never hoped to gain.

"I am sorry that the ladies are not at home," said Lord Bayneham, "but you will see them at Bayneham. We think of going to-morrow or the day afterward. Would it be quite convenient for you to follow us in—say a week from now?" Mr. Carlton comes then."

Mr. Fulton assumed an air of profound thought, which in a few minutes gave way to a bright smile.

It would suit him admirably, he said, as he had business in Wales afterward. He remained with Lord Bayneham for lunch, and there was

The Best Cough Syrup is Home-made.

Here's an easy way to save 25, and yet have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? When you do, you will understand why thousands of families, the world over, feel that they can't get better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for $2.50.

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy conquers a cough—usually in 24 hours or less. It sends to penetrate through every air passage, loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, breaks the membranes, and gives almost immediate relief. Splendid for throat, hoarseness, croup, bronchitis and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations for throat and chest ailments. To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "25¢ express of Pinex" with directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. that Lady Grahame was at home and alone. For once the indefatigable companion was off guard, and Lady Grahame was taken at a disadvantage.

"I have been spending a very pleasant morning," said Mr. Fulton, "with your friend Lord Bayneham. I had him all you describe; a most interesting companion."

This preamble gave the lady time to recover herself.

"I have something very serious to say to you this morning, Lady Grahame," continued Mr. Fulton; "I have been summoning courage for the task."

"Is it something very difficult or painful, then?" she asked with a smile.

"It is at once the most pleasing, yet the most difficult task of my life," he replied; "my own unworthiness renders it difficult. Lady Grahame, you can understand that the deepest feeling is least expressed by rhapsody. In straightforward, honest words, may I ask you the question upon which the happiness of my whole life depends—will you be my wife?"

A genuine blush covered the comely face; she had long known the question was coming, but just at that moment was not prepared to receive it.

"That is an important question," she said, "and requires consideration."

"You do not at once dismiss it as an impossibility," said Paul Fulton; "I shall therefore venture to hope. If you will intrust me with the happiness of your life, you shall never repent the trust. Tell me, may I venture to hope that at some future time I may receive a more favorable answer?"

"It is not impossible," replied the fair widow coquettishly. It was not very impassioned wooing. Just a remembrance crossed his mind of the time when he made love under the trees of Brynmar woods; of the lovely young face that had changed with his every word, of the soft, sweet lips, the half-whispered, loving words.

This wooing in a Mayfair drawing-room was a very different matter. He threw as much rapture as possible into his reply to Lady Grahame's last words, then adroitly branched off to other subjects.

"Mr. Fulton," said Lady Grahame, "of course you know I am a widow. Have you ever been married?"

Taken by surprise, he had no time to think what answer would be safest.

"No," he replied boldly. "I have asked this morning what I never asked before."

"I am glad," she replied. "I should not like to think you were a widower; there is something very prosaic in the idea."

Mr. Fulton had no sooner uttered the words than he repented them. As a rule he avoided useless untruths. He found them apt to rise and confront him awkwardly. From mere policy he told the truth whenever he found it possible. For a few minutes he almost feared he had acted unwisely, but reflection reassured him. Who knew anything of his marriage? There was no possible contingency which should make it known. The dead tell no tales, and there was no one living who could know anything of Magdalen Hurst.

"Indeed!" said the countess, her interest in him ceasing at once.

He might be handsome, polished, and wealthy, Lady Grahame's lover and her son's friend, but he had no connections; she would be bland and amiable toward him, but real interest in him she could feel none.

Mr. Fulton's heart beat high with hope as he left Lord Bayneham's mansion in Grosvenor Square. He felt sure that he had most favorably impressed the young earl, and was half-intoxicated with his own success. No suspicion, or even thought, crossed his mind with regard to the picture. Once before, in a picture shop, he had seen a very beautiful engraving, and the face of the girl had reminded him of Magdalen; and as he went along the crowded suit streets he thought of her.

"It is almost a pity," he said to himself, "that she was a peasant; among these grand ladies I see no face so beautiful, no figure so graceful, as hers. I will make this a day of successes," he thought; "I will see Lady Grahame and ask her at once if she will be my wife."

He went to the widow's house, and in answer to his inquiries was told

Burns
Burns are very painful and dangerous, and if not treated promptly and properly, are in danger of poisoning. They will also leave disfiguring scars if not guarded against.

CHRISTMAS.

Was there lowlier place of birth
Ever known upon the earth?
A bleak and barren stable
And the mother's bed of straw,
And the rich who filled the inn
That would not let Mary in,
The angels who were watching
Through the darkness, never saw.

High the Star of Bethlehem
Shone above, but not for them;
Never once they ceased their laughter,
Never once they quit the room;
Of that number but a few
Ever cared or ever knew
That a woman had been ordered
To the stable's murky gloom.

Not until the Wise Men came
Did they learn this baby's name;
Not until the Wise Men offered
Gold and frankincense and myrrh,
Not until the break of dawn
Did they know a king was born,
And that God had blessed the stable
With the mother lying there.

Now the Star of Bethlehem
Which God hung above for them
Still leads us to the stable
And the manger where He lay;
And throughout the ages long
Men repeat that angel song
Which rang out above the stable
On that first glad Christmas Day.
