CHAPTER X.

From his trance—a trance every unfortunate lover has fallen into more than once—he awoke, at last, to the hard reality of being very cold, and an unromantic vision of fevers, and agues, and rheumatic chills rising suddenly and unpleasantly before him, he turned to leave the uncomfortable old room. He paused a second to contemplate, with intense feelings of interest and curiosity, the doors, one at either end of the room—that toward the left being the one into which Jaquetta had passed to still the weird music; the other to the right being that which he had both entered last, and which he conjectured led to the inhabited parts of the house. Even had he desired to enter, he knew he could not, for Jaquetta had securely locked both; so, giving them a parting glance, he ran down the stone stairs and passed out of the aperture by which he had entered.

The hall door remained as he left it—proof positive that neither Jaquetta nor her companion had entered the house by its means. He softly unlocked it after him and then ascending the stairs, sought his room—not to sleep, but to pace up and down until morning should dawn.

Another sensation of wonder besides that relating to Jaquetta filled his mind. He had heard them mention Norma—what knew they of her? That both knew she had been his fiancée while in England was evident, and that he felt convinced was the reason why Jaquetta had so scornfully and indignantly rejected him. What if he should give up this high-born fiancée of his? But had he courage for such a sacrifice—was she worth it? Some day, and most probably soon, he would be Earl of Sarncliffe and Baron of Guilford; and did he not owe something to the world and his high position? And more, did he not owe a great deal to this lady betrothed of his at home? True, he remembered the engagement had been none of his making, but that of Sarncliffe's and the lady's father, who wished to see the family united, for the former, because the lady was unexceptionable in beauty and family, and would have an immense dowry; and the latter, because he wished his daughter, who, with all her wealth,

German Scare at Bournemouth

The charming English summer resort of Bournemouth has had a German scare recently.

Villages for miles around the resort have been asking each other the question: "Have you seen the German Crown Prince?" in awe-struck tones. Scores of people claim to have seen him.

They are all so convinced that "Little Willie" had smuggled himself into England that a special Home Office investigation has been held.

The first suspicious circumstance was the manner of the arrival of the "Crown Prince." He crossed to England, but not by the ordinary route; he took a passage in an ocean-going liner and landed at Southampton with his wife and two children.

As soon as they arrived at the hotel the staff thought he was "Little Willie," and his luggage and personal belongings were stamped with a crown, which was a suspicious circumstance. Then a visitor at the hotel, who had been a lady-in-waiting to British royalty, was struck by the family likeness of the man to the Crown Prince.

By this time the alarm was general. The facts were reported to Scotland yard, but before any official action was taken the most dramatic development of all occurred.

Another visitor to the hotel found the foreigner alone in a room with five large maps opened in front of him. He was studying them closely. Here was the old German spy-trick of pre-war days in full blast again, and the master spy of the new Germany himself at it!

The super-timid expected Zeppelins over that night, and an S.O.B. was sent to Scotland yard. The result was the visit of a Home Office official to the hotel and an examination of the man's papers, followed by a long interview with the man himself.

The official was satisfied that he is the Dutchman described in his passport, and that his likeness to "Little Willie" is merely his misfortune, but the villagers are not satisfied. They bolted their doors and bared their windows at night with the same care as they had been doing for a week.

be such a bore to be violently in love! And so things were in this satisfactory state, and the course of true love was running as smooth as a milldam, when the young guardsman got a commission in a regiment ordered to Ireland, and led a gay life of it, for two or three years, alternately in that beautiful city called Cork, and the capital of the Emerald Isle, while Miss Norma was inspiring her mind and kissing the miniature of her dashing lover within the consecrated walls of a fashionable boarding school. Then he returned to England, to avoid the consequences of some tremendous scrape he had got into in Dublin, saw his chère amie, who had grown a thousand times more beautiful than ever, and twice as much in love, from constantly thinking of her absent truant, Miss Norma's papa, and the Honorable Alfred's brother wished the marriage to take place on the young lady's nineteenth birthday, and the young lady and gentleman being willing enough, settlements were made, and everything got ready for the important occasion. And meantime, by way of a change, Captain Disbrow took it into his erratic head that a good way to kill time would be to visit America, and hunt up his mother's relatives, the De Vere's, which he did to his cost, as the reader already knows.

Which is the Best Pay Day

NOVEL EFFORTS TO ENCOURAGE THRIFT.

An agitation has again been started for paying war widows' pensions on Friday instead of at the beginning of the week, when, it is said, many commodities are dearer than they are on Saturday. This is not the experience of some of the housewives, and it is doubtful whether anything would be gained by making an alteration.

Similar proposals are not unknown in regard to paying wages. It was once contended in Parliament that Monday should be the general pay day, because under existing conditions much rubbish is wasted on the public on Saturday, and because some workers lose time on Monday owing to the excesses of the previous day, which, being a holiday, affords opportunities for drinking.

A still more revolutionary change was advocated by a certain employer. It was that the weekly pay day should be abolished by law, and that wages should be paid at intervals of not less than a fortnight. The object in view was avowedly to decrease drinking.

Experiments That Failed.

Many times, too, pay day has actually been changed by way of experiment. Some employers have adopted a practise common in America, where most big firms in some States pay wages on Monday evening, and then not in cash, but by cheque.

The result, it is said, is very satisfactory in America, men who were formerly bad timekeepers now turning up punctually to work, and, in addition, paying their contributions regularly to building societies, instead of frequently falling into arrears. In this country, however, the plan of paying wages on Monday has proved unsuccessful.

Friday also has been tried as pay day. Some years ago, a number of firms in the building trade started paying wages then on the assumption that workmen's wives would be able to go shopping early on Saturday morning and get the pick of the market. But in practice paying wages on Friday resulted in the disorganization of work, many men not putting in an appearance the following morning. So the firms reverted to paying wages at noon on Saturday.

A north-country firm made the experiment of paying wages fortnightly—on the 15th and the last day of the month, unless a pay day fell on a Sunday or Bank Holiday, when wages were paid the previous day. It was supposed that, in consequence of receiving money fortnightly instead of weekly, housewives would regulate their expenditure, and that there would be no lean time—usually Thursday and Friday in every week.

But the plan was a failure. In many cases there was immense difficulty in tiding over the first fortnight, and the general effect of the change was to make matters worse than they had been before.
