

Some Dealers Will Try To substitute other Teas for the sake of extra profit.

SALADA CEYLON TEA

should be demanded if you want the best. Japan tea drinkers, try "Salada" Green Tea.

Lola's Secret, A Romance.

CHAPTER XLIII.

It was noon of the day following when Gertrude asked her mother if she would go downstairs. Dolores, worn out with her sorrows, had slept the sound sleep of exhaustion; but Gertrude, lying by her side, had heard the solemn tones of the burden-bearers, and knew what had been brought home.

"They have found him, mamma," she said gently, "just where he was dead. Harry says he must have died before he reached the ground, so that he could not have suffered much. It was only the intense agony of one moment, and then all was over." Dolores grasped her daughter's arm. "What is that?" she cried, trembling from head to foot. "What is it, Gertrude?"

Through the open window came the peal of muffled bells—clear, distinct. "It is for papa," replied the girl. "All these years they have believed him guilty, and now they are endeavoring to outlive in doing him honor. All the church bells around will ring muffled peals for him; but, oh, dear mamma, no Christian in those churches stood up and said, 'Think twice before you pronounce judgment on an absent man.'"

"They went down together. Outside the sun shone warm and golden, the birds sang gaily; inside, all was dark and solemn. The muffled peals—half transformed into a chapele argente. It was draped in black, and red tapers shone like stars in the darkness. In the middle of the hall stood the funeral bier, covered with a black velvet pall, and upon the oaken coffin which contained all that remained of the once handsome, genial baronet lay a wreath of white roses and in the midst of the flowers was the ruby ring. Dolores and he had parted sixteen years before, on a sweet summer night, with loving words and kisses. Sixteen years of doubt and pain, of anguish and desolation, lay between the girl and she who was living, he dead! They were together again. Dolores did not utter a word. She laid straight to the coffin, and laid her fair head upon it, clasping her arms round it as though she would never leave it. Those present drew back—even the daughter who had been so confident and devoted to him—and left her alone with the dead. They heard her afterward talking to him as though he had been living and could hear her. She spoke of how they had loved each other, of how great had been her anguish and desolation, of how she had misjudged her. They could hear the gentle plaintive murmur that never stopped, and no one listened with dry eyes. Hour after hour passed by and the fair head was never raised, the clinging arms were never unclosed. If she could but die and rest with him forever!

"Oh, my darling, my love," she cried, "I think of your face as I saw it last on earth; so let me see it first in heaven!" It was Lord Feilden who at length went to her. "My dearest Lady Allammore," he said, "there are many who wish to see their last respects to Sir Karl. Would you like to go away first?" The face she raised to his struck him with awe and wonder. "No," she said, "I will not leave him until he is carried away." And she did not. It was a terrible sight that Lady Allammore kept by her husband's coffin, for though there were times when she felt half-dying by it, she would not leave it until it was borne away.

His kindly face would never bend over her again, his arms would never enfold her, his lips never be pressed to hers; she would never rest again with her head on his breast, feeling that her sure refuge was there; but she would rather have knelt before his coffin than have sat by another on a throne. Lady Feilden came to her at last on the day appointed for the funeral. Nearly the whole country had been to do him homage; men, women and children had crowded round the bier, and people had wept as much to see the fair-headed wife beside the coffin as they had wept for him who lay within it. "My dear Dolores," asked Lady Feilden, "will you come away? I have not asked you before, I have felt that you liked to spend these hours with your beloved dead, you had a right to do so; but now the day is come when he is to be laid to rest, at last and you must come away." "Where will they lay him?" she asked. "By Gertrude's desire he will be buried at Scarsdale. There is an open space of ground in the park, and she says that it will be your wish to have a mausoleum erected there. She thinks to have him buried so near to you, where you can go every day and strew some flowers on his grave, will be like some little monument for letting him lie all those years unburied."

And it had pleased her to set them to music. They just suited her case exactly, she thought. If it were not love, what was it? Aye, it was love, why did he not say so?

Sixteen months had passed since the funeral of Sir Karl Allammore, and the old wrong had been righted. Lady Allammore, with her two daughters, had gone to Scarsdale, and something like a gleam of happiness had come to Dolores.

In the midst of the park lay a broad open grassy expanse, and there a magnificent mausoleum had been erected, in which Sir Karl's remains had been placed. Except when the north wind blew and the rain fell fast, Dolores went there every day, most frequently at evening, when the birds sang their vesper hymn, and the long shadows lay upon the grass. There she would kneel, and the quivering lips, were piteous to see. Lady Allammore kissed the velvet pall.

"Who is that?" she said, good-bye, dear love, good-bye." As she bent over the coffin, she saw the ring for the first time; a tiny cry came from her lips. "Who is that?" she cried, trembling from head to foot. "What is it, Gertrude?"

Through the open window came the peal of muffled bells—clear, distinct. "It is for papa," replied the girl. "All these years they have believed him guilty, and now they are endeavoring to outlive in doing him honor. All the church bells around will ring muffled peals for him; but, oh, dear mamma, no Christian in those churches stood up and said, 'Think twice before you pronounce judgment on an absent man.'"

"They went down together. Outside the sun shone warm and golden, the birds sang gaily; inside, all was dark and solemn. The muffled peals—half transformed into a chapele argente. It was draped in black, and red tapers shone like stars in the darkness. In the middle of the hall stood the funeral bier, covered with a black velvet pall, and upon the oaken coffin which contained all that remained of the once handsome, genial baronet lay a wreath of white roses and in the midst of the flowers was the ruby ring. Dolores and he had parted sixteen years before, on a sweet summer night, with loving words and kisses. Sixteen years of doubt and pain, of anguish and desolation, lay between the girl and she who was living, he dead! They were together again. Dolores did not utter a word. She laid straight to the coffin, and laid her fair head upon it, clasping her arms round it as though she would never leave it. Those present drew back—even the daughter who had been so confident and devoted to him—and left her alone with the dead. They heard her afterward talking to him as though he had been living and could hear her. She spoke of how they had loved each other, of how great had been her anguish and desolation, of how she had misjudged her. They could hear the gentle plaintive murmur that never stopped, and no one listened with dry eyes. Hour after hour passed by and the fair head was never raised, the clinging arms were never unclosed. If she could but die and rest with him forever!

"Oh, my darling, my love," she cried, "I think of your face as I saw it last on earth; so let me see it first in heaven!" It was Lord Feilden who at length went to her. "My dearest Lady Allammore," he said, "there are many who wish to see their last respects to Sir Karl. Would you like to go away first?" The face she raised to his struck him with awe and wonder. "No," she said, "I will not leave him until he is carried away." And she did not. It was a terrible sight that Lady Allammore kept by her husband's coffin, for though there were times when she felt half-dying by it, she would not leave it until it was borne away.

His kindly face would never bend over her again, his arms would never enfold her, his lips never be pressed to hers; she would never rest again with her head on his breast, feeling that her sure refuge was there; but she would rather have knelt before his coffin than have sat by another on a throne. Lady Feilden came to her at last on the day appointed for the funeral. Nearly the whole country had been to do him homage; men, women and children had crowded round the bier, and people had wept as much to see the fair-headed wife beside the coffin as they had wept for him who lay within it. "My dear Dolores," asked Lady Feilden, "will you come away? I have not asked you before, I have felt that you liked to spend these hours with your beloved dead, you had a right to do so; but now the day is come when he is to be laid to rest, at last and you must come away."

"Where will they lay him?" she asked. "By Gertrude's desire he will be buried at Scarsdale. There is an open space of ground in the park, and she says that it will be your wish to have a mausoleum erected there. She thinks to have him buried so near to you, where you can go every day and strew some flowers on his grave, will be like some little monument for letting him lie all those years unburied."

In the midst of the park lay a broad open grassy expanse, and there a magnificent mausoleum had been erected, in which Sir Karl's remains had been placed. Except when the north wind blew and the rain fell fast, Dolores went there every day, most frequently at evening, when the birds sang their vesper hymn, and the long shadows lay upon the grass. There she would kneel, and the quivering lips, were piteous to see. Lady Allammore kissed the velvet pall.

And it had pleased her to set them to music. They just suited her case exactly, she thought. If it were not love, what was it? Aye, it was love, why did he not say so?

Sixteen months had passed since the funeral of Sir Karl Allammore, and the old wrong had been righted. Lady Allammore, with her two daughters, had gone to Scarsdale, and something like a gleam of happiness had come to Dolores.

In the midst of the park lay a broad open grassy expanse, and there a magnificent mausoleum had been erected, in which Sir Karl's remains had been placed. Except when the north wind blew and the rain fell fast, Dolores went there every day, most frequently at evening, when the birds sang their vesper hymn, and the long shadows lay upon the grass. There she would kneel, and the quivering lips, were piteous to see. Lady Allammore kissed the velvet pall.

"Who is that?" she said, good-bye, dear love, good-bye." As she bent over the coffin, she saw the ring for the first time; a tiny cry came from her lips. "Who is that?" she cried, trembling from head to foot. "What is it, Gertrude?"

Through the open window came the peal of muffled bells—clear, distinct. "It is for papa," replied the girl. "All these years they have believed him guilty, and now they are endeavoring to outlive in doing him honor. All the church bells around will ring muffled peals for him; but, oh, dear mamma, no Christian in those churches stood up and said, 'Think twice before you pronounce judgment on an absent man.'"

"They went down together. Outside the sun shone warm and golden, the birds sang gaily; inside, all was dark and solemn. The muffled peals—half transformed into a chapele argente. It was draped in black, and red tapers shone like stars in the darkness. In the middle of the hall stood the funeral bier, covered with a black velvet pall, and upon the oaken coffin which contained all that remained of the once handsome, genial baronet lay a wreath of white roses and in the midst of the flowers was the ruby ring. Dolores and he had parted sixteen years before, on a sweet summer night, with loving words and kisses. Sixteen years of doubt and pain, of anguish and desolation, lay between the girl and she who was living, he dead! They were together again. Dolores did not utter a word. She laid straight to the coffin, and laid her fair head upon it, clasping her arms round it as though she would never leave it. Those present drew back—even the daughter who had been so confident and devoted to him—and left her alone with the dead. They heard her afterward talking to him as though he had been living and could hear her. She spoke of how they had loved each other, of how great had been her anguish and desolation, of how she had misjudged her. They could hear the gentle plaintive murmur that never stopped, and no one listened with dry eyes. Hour after hour passed by and the fair head was never raised, the clinging arms were never unclosed. If she could but die and rest with him forever!

"Oh, my darling, my love," she cried, "I think of your face as I saw it last on earth; so let me see it first in heaven!" It was Lord Feilden who at length went to her. "My dearest Lady Allammore," he said, "there are many who wish to see their last respects to Sir Karl. Would you like to go away first?" The face she raised to his struck him with awe and wonder. "No," she said, "I will not leave him until he is carried away." And she did not. It was a terrible sight that Lady Allammore kept by her husband's coffin, for though there were times when she felt half-dying by it, she would not leave it until it was borne away.

His kindly face would never bend over her again, his arms would never enfold her, his lips never be pressed to hers; she would never rest again with her head on his breast, feeling that her sure refuge was there; but she would rather have knelt before his coffin than have sat by another on a throne. Lady Feilden came to her at last on the day appointed for the funeral. Nearly the whole country had been to do him homage; men, women and children had crowded round the bier, and people had wept as much to see the fair-headed wife beside the coffin as they had wept for him who lay within it. "My dear Dolores," asked Lady Feilden, "will you come away? I have not asked you before, I have felt that you liked to spend these hours with your beloved dead, you had a right to do so; but now the day is come when he is to be laid to rest, at last and you must come away."

"Where will they lay him?" she asked. "By Gertrude's desire he will be buried at Scarsdale. There is an open space of ground in the park, and she says that it will be your wish to have a mausoleum erected there. She thinks to have him buried so near to you, where you can go every day and strew some flowers on his grave, will be like some little monument for letting him lie all those years unburied."

In the midst of the park lay a broad open grassy expanse, and there a magnificent mausoleum had been erected, in which Sir Karl's remains had been placed. Except when the north wind blew and the rain fell fast, Dolores went there every day, most frequently at evening, when the birds sang their vesper hymn, and the long shadows lay upon the grass. There she would kneel, and the quivering lips, were piteous to see. Lady Allammore kissed the velvet pall.

And it had pleased her to set them to music. They just suited her case exactly, she thought. If it were not love, what was it? Aye, it was love, why did he not say so?

Sixteen months had passed since the funeral of Sir Karl Allammore, and the old wrong had been righted. Lady Allammore, with her two daughters, had gone to Scarsdale, and something like a gleam of happiness had come to Dolores.

In the midst of the park lay a broad open grassy expanse, and there a magnificent mausoleum had been erected, in which Sir Karl's remains had been placed. Except when the north wind blew and the rain fell fast, Dolores went there every day, most frequently at evening, when the birds sang their vesper hymn, and the long shadows lay upon the grass. There she would kneel, and the quivering lips, were piteous to see. Lady Allammore kissed the velvet pall.

"Who is that?" she said, good-bye, dear love, good-bye." As she bent over the coffin, she saw the ring for the first time; a tiny cry came from her lips. "Who is that?" she cried, trembling from head to foot. "What is it, Gertrude?"

Through the open window came the peal of muffled bells—clear, distinct. "It is for papa," replied the girl. "All these years they have believed him guilty, and now they are endeavoring to outlive in doing him honor. All the church bells around will ring muffled peals for him; but, oh, dear mamma, no Christian in those churches stood up and said, 'Think twice before you pronounce judgment on an absent man.'"

"They went down together. Outside the sun shone warm and golden, the birds sang gaily; inside, all was dark and solemn. The muffled peals—half transformed into a chapele argente. It was draped in black, and red tapers shone like stars in the darkness. In the middle of the hall stood the funeral bier, covered with a black velvet pall, and upon the oaken coffin which contained all that remained of the once handsome, genial baronet lay a wreath of white roses and in the midst of the flowers was the ruby ring. Dolores and he had parted sixteen years before, on a sweet summer night, with loving words and kisses. Sixteen years of doubt and pain, of anguish and desolation, lay between the girl and she who was living, he dead! They were together again. Dolores did not utter a word. She laid straight to the coffin, and laid her fair head upon it, clasping her arms round it as though she would never leave it. Those present drew back—even the daughter who had been so confident and devoted to him—and left her alone with the dead. They heard her afterward talking to him as though he had been living and could hear her. She spoke of how they had loved each other, of how great had been her anguish and desolation, of how she had misjudged her. They could hear the gentle plaintive murmur that never stopped, and no one listened with dry eyes. Hour after hour passed by and the fair head was never raised, the clinging arms were never unclosed. If she could but die and rest with him forever!

"Oh, my darling, my love," she cried, "I think of your face as I saw it last on earth; so let me see it first in heaven!" It was Lord Feilden who at length went to her. "My dearest Lady Allammore," he said, "there are many who wish to see their last respects to Sir Karl. Would you like to go away first?" The face she raised to his struck him with awe and wonder. "No," she said, "I will not leave him until he is carried away." And she did not. It was a terrible sight that Lady Allammore kept by her husband's coffin, for though there were times when she felt half-dying by it, she would not leave it until it was borne away.

His kindly face would never bend over her again, his arms would never enfold her, his lips never be pressed to hers; she would never rest again with her head on his breast, feeling that her sure refuge was there; but she would rather have knelt before his coffin than have sat by another on a throne. Lady Feilden came to her at last on the day appointed for the funeral. Nearly the whole country had been to do him homage; men, women and children had crowded round the bier, and people had wept as much to see the fair-headed wife beside the coffin as they had wept for him who lay within it. "My dear Dolores," asked Lady Feilden, "will you come away? I have not asked you before, I have felt that you liked to spend these hours with your beloved dead, you had a right to do so; but now the day is come when he is to be laid to rest, at last and you must come away."

"Where will they lay him?" she asked. "By Gertrude's desire he will be buried at Scarsdale. There is an open space of ground in the park, and she says that it will be your wish to have a mausoleum erected there. She thinks to have him buried so near to you, where you can go every day and strew some flowers on his grave, will be like some little monument for letting him lie all those years unburied."

In the midst of the park lay a broad open grassy expanse, and there a magnificent mausoleum had been erected, in which Sir Karl's remains had been placed. Except when the north wind blew and the rain fell fast, Dolores went there every day, most frequently at evening, when the birds sang their vesper hymn, and the long shadows lay upon the grass. There she would kneel, and the quivering lips, were piteous to see. Lady Allammore kissed the velvet pall.

JAMES PYLE'S PEARLINE WASHING COMPOUND THE GREAT INVENTION SAVING TOIL & EXPENSE WITHOUT INJURY TO THE TEXTURE OF ALL FABRICS. NEW YORK.

Out of sorts with Soap Powders - then your package does not look like this Never a complaint of Pearline

The Cook of every household knows a whole lot about coal. Cooks have enough trouble with clinkery, dirty, slaty, uncertain coal to know how to appreciate the genuine all around goodness of WALLA WALLA coal.

BOWMAN & CO., 295 Clarence St. F. B. CLARKE, Agent, Next Advertiser Office.

Feb. 12, Paris at Simcoe, Brantford at Woodstock; Feb. 15, Simcoe at Paris, Woodstock at Brantford; Feb. 22, Brantford at Paris, Simcoe at Woodstock; March 1, Paris at Brantford, Woodstock at Simcoe; March 8, Woodstock at Paris, Brantford at Simcoe; March 15, Paris at Woodstock, Simcoe at Brantford.

THE CITY LEAGUE. Now that the football season is over, the intermediate champions of Canada have a desire for hockey honors, and at a meeting held Saturday night it was decided that a team should be entered in the city league. The meeting was unanimous in electing Frank Hobbs manager and C. H. Christie secretary-treasurer.

BASEBALL. THE OUTLOOK FOR 1901. Toronto, Dec. 8.—Ed. Barrow, manager of the Toronto baseball team, arrived in the city from Providence today, and has something to say of the baseball outlook generally. He says he found the other leagues well disposed towards the Eastern League. He thinks Buffalo will have difficulty in getting into the National League next season. There is a slight possibility, too, says Manager Barrow, that Washington and Baltimore will fall to gain access to the National League, and may fall back on the Eastern League.

BEFORE DECIDING ON YOUR TRIP TO SOUTHERN POINTS obtain our Tourist Fares to ASHVILLE, N.C., GALVESTON, TEXAS, HOT SPRINGS, ARK., JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA, LAS VEGAS, CAL., LOS ANGELES, CAL., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., NEW ORLEANS, LA., MEXICO CITY, MEXICO.

FOR THE CANADA'S CUP. Chicago, Dec. 8.—With the exception of the details of next summer's international yacht races, the Chicago Yacht Club's special committee of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club coming here to confer with the Chicago Yacht Club's special committee. Over the dates of the contest there may be some telegraphing, but no serious disagreement is anticipated. The most important feature of the race is the 35-foot class, as defined by the yacht racing union of the Great Lakes, and must be constructed according to its tables. The races will be sailed outside the Chicago harbor.

THE TURF. SATURDAY'S WINNERS. At Washington—Velasquez, Protege, Old Tank, Rochester, Alsike and Beau Ideal. At New Orleans—Herosa, Sakatuck, Frank McConnell, Knight Bannet, George and Gracious. At Oakland, San Francisco—May Gertrude, Lost Girl, Jim Hale, Tayan, Vulcan, Campus.

ANOTHER CUP DEFENDER. Boston, Dec. 8.—After a conference with Boston builders and a number of representative Boston yacht men, Thomas W. Lawson, a well-known financier and horse fancier of this city, announced tonight that he would personally stand the expense of building another yacht to compete for the honor of defending the American cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock II. The new yacht, according to Mr. Lawson, will be designed by B. R. Crownshield, of this city, who has already had considerable success with smaller boats, while George Lewis, of South Boston, the builder of the former cup defender, Puritan and Mayflower, and the outfit of still another, the Volunteer, will probably construct the new boat. It is expected that Capt. Nat Watson, one of the best skippers in the east, will act as sailing master, and Mr. Lawson also states that an opportunity will be given a number of college graduates to assist in working the boat as part of their crew. All matters pertaining to the construction of the new boat will be open at all times to any one interested.

WHITE STAR LINE. New York to Liverpool via Queenstown. IMPORTANT NOTICE. Winter Rates Now in Force. E. S. GERMANIC.....Dec. 12, noon *S. S. MAJESTIC.....Dec. 19, noon *Excellent Second Cabin accommodation on these steamers.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY. On and after Monday, Nov. 26, 1900, the train leaving Union Station Toronto (via Grand Trunk Railway) at 10:00 p.m., connects with the Maritime Express and Local Express at Bonaventure depot, Montreal, as follows: The Maritime Express will leave Montreal daily, except on Saturday, at 12 noon for Halifax, N. S., St. John, N. B., the Sydneys, and points in the Maritime Provinces; and will arrive at 12 noon for Halifax, N. S., St. John, N. B., the Sydneys, and points in the Maritime Provinces, except on Saturday, at 5:30 p.m.

ALLAN LINE. For Liverpool, calling at Montevideo, From From Portland, Halifax. Tunisian.....Dec. 13, Dec. 14 Numidian.....Jan. 2, Jan. 3 New York to Glasgow-Laurentian, Dec. 22, 10 a.m.

GOLF. VARDON DEFEATS ALL THREE. Denver, Col., Dec. 8.—HARRY VARDON defeated three opponents in the overland links today. He played against the best ball of James Russell, the instructor of the Overland Club, Frank J. S. Armitage, Paris. The schedule: winning by a score of 3 up. The game was for 36 holes.

CURE YOURSELF! Use Big G for unnatural discharges, inflammations, irritations or ulcerations of mucous membranes. THE TRAVELERS' CHEMICAL CO. CINCINNATI, O. U.S.A. Sold by Druggists. Circular sent on request.

WALKERVILLE. GLENCOE. Bass.....Goal.....Long Canaris.....Goal.....McKinley Nowak.....Backs.....D. Galbraith Bains.....Half-Backs.....J. Johnston Harrison Kozowski.....Forwards.....A. H. McAlpine Taylor.....W. Johnston Mrozinski.....D. G. Galbraith H. McInnis.....C. Meinke. Referee, John C. Stuart, Windsor; goal umpires, Wm. McDonald, Detroit, and Ollie Ross, Windsor. Time of halves, 45 minutes. Attendance, 400.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS. Annual Meeting of the Ontario Rugby Football Union. Walkerville Defeats Glencoe at Football—A Rugby Team for City Hockey League. FOOTBALL. THE O. R. F. B. U. Toronto, Dec. 8.—The 18th annual meeting of the Ontario Rugby Football Union was held here this afternoon, with thirteen clubs represented. The president, J. L. Council, occupied the chair. The following delegates were present: Ottawa, T. A. Godfrey, T. H. Thompson; Varsity, A. G. Laing, Wm. Ewies; London (St. John), A. H. Beaton; J. A. Macfarland, St. Marys, C. J. Road; Millery, Hamilton, H. W. J. Powers; Granites, A. J. J. Jones; W. J. Dash; Toronto, F. Ansley; R. M. C. Mr. Mullen, W. J. Morrison; Argonaut, C. S. Meek, C. E. A. Goldman; Chamouque, C. V. Lindsay, J. T. Robinson; St. Catharines, J. W. Walsh; B. Gibson; Queen's, J. W. Walsh; B. Gibson; Peterboro, J. A. McDonald; Lamesona, Mr. McLaughlin, H. H. Fawcett; President, J. N. Council; Vice-president, J. Morrison; Secretary, J. D. McMurrich; Executive Committee, D. F. Maguire, R. F. Shilling, W. Leggart, V. E. Henderson, J. S. Robinson; Treasurer, J. S. Robinson. President Council, in his address, opening the proceedings, said: "The heartiest congratulations are due this year's champions for their double victory over the Ontario Union. They have brought to the Ontario Union for winning the championship of Canada. For the honor and glory they have won they fought hard, and they are deserving of all the praise we can give them." Continuing, President Council said: "The executive have endeavored to act in the best interests of football in Canada. If we have been unsuccessful, it is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been actuated by any partisan spirit or personal motives. The chief cause of complaint on the part of the different clubs has been in the appointment of officials. Under the circumstances the clubs have no right whatever to complain, when they themselves have elected the officials, and have accepted of their own hands of avoiding every difficulty and dissatisfaction in the appointment of officials. It is only when they neglect to do their duty, and for that neglect they should take the blame, and not lay the blame upon the union. In reviewing the season from the point of the player or spectator we may fairly conclude that there has been no retrogression in the quality of the game. It is because we have lacked the foresight and ability necessary to preserve and advance these interests, and not because we have been act