Mr. Sifton and the Council.

The council last night threw another stumbling-block in the path of Mr. Sifton by refusing his very reasonable request to erect wires to two buildings, pending the final adjustment of his agreement with the city. The meanness of the council in this instance is quite in keeping with their previous course of petty obstruction. The agreement under which Mr. Sifton will eventually have the privilege of erecting these wires is practically completed, nothing but the mere form of adoption by the council being lacking. He is desirous of erecting wires to two shops, not through any desire for immediate gain, but because he wishes to consult, in so far as he may, the convenience of his customers. Yet the council refuse his modest request and place another obstacle in his way. A somewhat astonishing feature of the discussion at last night's meeting was the presence of Mr. Hunt, manager of the London Electric Company. No one could make any objection to the fact that the council accepted his advice in a matter with which he had nothing whatever to do. The consideration of Mr. Sifton's request was a matter for Mr. Sifton and the council only; and by appealing to the head of a rival company the council not only committed a very childish act, but a very unfair one.

Schwab and the Strenuous Life.

The news that Charles Schwab, president of the United States Steel Corporation, has been compelled to retire from active business life for an indefinite period, furnishes food for serious reflection. In the quiet, old-world corner to which his physicians have commanded him to go, Mr. Schwab will have ample time to ponder upon the everlasting question: Is the game worth the candle? Is the wealth of a Croesus and unlimited power in the industrial world worth seeking at the price of health and peace of mind? He will probably answer himself in the negative. It makes a great difference in a man's judgment whether he view the battle of life from an invalid's chair, through eyes burning with the fever of sickness, or from the deck of a pleasure yacht, when nerves are steady and all the world is atone; for there is as much truth now as ever in Carlyle's remark that the healthy know not of their health, but only the sick. Mr. Schwab played the game for all that was in him, and now, while still a young man comparatively, he finds himself a physical wreck. Rare business ability, aided by fortuitous circumstances, placed him at the head of one of the greatest corporations in the world; then fate took another turn at the wheel and the man who commanded millions found himself in worse plight than the most humble of his toilers in Pittsburgh. Mr. Schwab is only one of thousands of victims of the strenuous life in the United States, but his case is made more conspicuous by the height to which he has climbed. Americans seem to take an especial delight in the term strenuous as applied to the feverish and unnatural mode of life by which fortunes are made in a day. "Hustle" used to be the term, but one never hears of a hustler nowadays; the word did not express enough to suit the superlative temperament of the Yankee. The man who has a telephone placed on his table while he is bolting a 10-minute lunch at a restaurant, is something more than a hustler; he is a follower of the strenuous life. The Chicago Tribune, commenting upon the unsuccessful efforts of M. Santos-Dumont to interest New York capitalists in his aerial transportation project, observes that Americans have no time to fly. That very nearly expresses the fact. Lust for the power which the possession of untold millions can also give, has driven the nation mad. It is a madness, however, that must cure itself by its own violence. In Great Britain the term "success" has a different meaning. Contrast the life work of Mr. Schwab with that of Lord Salisbury. Telling in widely different spheres of action, both achieved that which men term success. One retires, ripe with the accumulated years, in vigorous old age, honored by his countrymen and respected by the world; the other, at an age when he should be at his best, mentally and physically, steps down and out, soon to be forgotten. Is the strenuous life worth while after all, Mr. Schwab?

"Wild West" Newspapers

The British Columbia papers devote much space to reports of the new famous McAdams case. The chief justice, by whom McAdams was released from prison after presenting a written apology to the affronted judges, concluded his remarks as follows:

"William McAdams, you have been found guilty of what was one of the greatest contempt of court ever recorded. I have searched up the record of such cases, and I have found no case which approaches this. In such cases as this the court must exercise its jurisdiction, and the only reason the court will take a lenient course is because the press has not been checked up in such matters as it might have been. Your ignorance of the decrees of one man's behavior to another man seems to be remarkable. I have perused these few issues of your paper, which I have here, and I must say that a more disreputable and atrocious paper I have never seen."

The majority of the western papers express sympathy for McAdams, but the Manitoba Free Press seems to think the severity of the punishment was deserved. It says, referring to the chief justice's remarks:

"This is a rather scathing observation on the type of wild western newspapers of which there are numerous samples, some of them much nearer home than Sandom. The cardinal doctrine of these journals is that any measure of success in life or the holding of any responsible position, whether by appointment, or election is the certain and sure mark of scoundrelism. They look at the world through jealous and malignant eyes, and consider all mankind, excepting a few choice spirits in close communion with their own, as corrupt and crooked. They have, like Mr. McAdams, a remarkable ignorance of the decrees of one man's behavior to another."

Those men who spent the night on a gas buoy in Lake Erie know what it is to be rocked in the cradle of the deep.

Mr. Schwab evidently overlooked the fact that to remain president of the steel trust one must have an iron constitution.

The Woodstock Times thinks that town should be advertised as the most desirable spot on earth for summer tourists, presumably because people have such good times there.

Max O'Rell, who confesses that the sight of a pretty woman makes him weep, should stay away from Hamilton. A brief sojourn in this town would cause him to run dry.—Hamilton Herald.

The omission of the last three letters in the last sentence will not express the truth of the matter.

The newspaper compositor sometimes makes blunders, since to err is human; but seldom has he been guilty of so much unconscious irony as when, in yesterday's Advertiser, he set the following line in a heading referring to the passing of Mr. Schwab: "President of the U. S. Steel Combine Has Retired."

The wheat prospect in Germany has been cut down, especially in quality, by cold rains in August, and Germany will have to draw upon Russia's surplus. Russia is troubled with famine in several large provinces, but the Russian Government never thinks of feeding the famine-stricken on wheat food. It supplies them with something cheaper and exports the wheat as a cash crop.

In declaring war on American transportation and American manufacturers, the Canadian minister of public works, the Hon. J. I. Tarte, was a bit tart in his remarks.—Boston Herald.

Our esteemed but bean-eating contemporary is in error; the facts are as follows: In enunciating his bellicose intentions in reference to American transportation and American manufacturers, the Canadian minister of public works, the Hon. J. I. Tarte, displayed a considerable amount of acerbity in the expression of his opinions.

In a Special Class.
[Kingston Whig.]
The newspaper is like the image Nebuchadnezzar saw, of gold, silver, brass, iron and dirt. At its best it is magnificent, meaner as you reach downward, and when you get to the lowest—the yellow kind—mean as dirt. The newspaper is neither better nor worse than public sentiment, for it is the mirror of that sentiment. One may correctly gauge the moral character of a community by the tone of its papers. This is the candid philosophy of an American preacher. Wonder how he would classify Kingston as a community, judged by its journals. The analysis would be highly interesting, and might explain some public peculiarities.

The Point of View.
[Brockville Recorder.]
The Brantford Examiner thinks we have too many holidays. That may be true in Brantford, where the rich manufacturers and richer newspaper men are able to holiday, just when they choose, but for our poor chaps who have to hustle to get bread and hustle harder to get butter to spread on it, the holidays are quite acceptable.

More Precious Than Rubies.

Domestic training of some kind should be a part of every girl's education, is the opinion of The London Advertiser, and the citizens of that burg have endorsed this view by adopting the course on next year's school curriculum. The course at the schools

"One Touch of Nature."

[William Shakespeare: "Troilus and Cressida."] High birth, vigor of bone, desert in service, Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all To envious and calumniating time. One touch of nature makes the whole world kin, And that which is a little more than kin, And less than blood, makes perfect friends.

presents it in an attractive form and tends to cultivate an interest in practical household duties which are not as popular in the present day as they might be. Perhaps the prevailing scarcity of domestic help is not without its uses if it compels a closer attention to kitchen details by "the lady of the house." Whether she can afford help or not, the art of management is equally necessary, and to one who possesses it is more precious than rubies. A scientific training in domestic economy will make a girl more useful to her parents, and in later years decidedly more advantageous to her husband.

When the Crops Are In.

[Chicago Record-Herald.] "There's a kind of happy feelin' creeps down in a feller when He's got his punkins gathered and the hay-mow's full again. There's hope in all the breezes that come blowin' from the hill, And you get to kind of thinkin' God is up there somewhere still; What a purty sight the wheat is as it's Oh, it's good to be a farmer when the crops are in.

"It's lively in the city, and it's very quiet here; There's the hurry and the racket keeps agoin' all the year; There's most every day's excitin' and they not sleep it up at night. Every way a person gazes there is some uncommon sight. And I s'pose it's never lonesome, livin' round the haunts of sin— But the city people never have their crops are in.

"There's many a day of tollin' and there's many an ache and pain, And there's lots and lots of frettin' at the dryness or the rain. There's the weeds and the worms and insects that the farmer has to fight. But the good Lord doesn't often fail to pull 'im through all right. And the sweetest satisfaction that a mortal man can win Sort of hovers round the farmer when the crops are in.

A Paradox.

[Cleveland Plaindealer.] "There is one thing I have noticed that is well worth considering." "And what is that?" "That it is rarely the single men who lead the double lives."

Prospect of Big Crops.

Winnipeg, Aug. 19.—Crop reports continue favorable and nearly all portions of the province. It is expected the harvest in Manitoba will be general by the end of the week.

Quebec, Aug. 19.—The Lake St. John and Saguenay valleys crops give great promise this fall. All are well matured and are ripening nicely, and that, providing there are no early frosts, the harvest will be close to a record one. Farmers are enlarging their barns so as to afford accommodation for their wheat. Notwithstanding the prophecy in the early part of the season of a potato famine in this district, the crop is now reported to be fully up to the average or better than last year.

Another Elevator Company.

Montreal, Aug. 19.—Montreal is likely to have another elevator erected shortly by private enterprise, the project being that of Albert P. Stewart, the large grain importer of London, Eng. Messrs. S. G. Archibald, advocate, Edward B. Jacques, and W. R. Staveley of Montreal, Mr. Archibald, who is solicitor for the incorporators, states that a general trade in the exporting of grain and cereals of all kinds will be engaged in, and that in time elevators and wharves will be acquired. The capital stock is $250,000.

Wife of Vanderbilt Heir Is Not Seeking Reconciliation.

May Receive $100,000 for Support—Does Not Ask Alimony.

New York, Aug. 19.—A rumor that young Elliott F. Shepard, grandson of the late William H. Vanderbilt, had been in Greenport visiting his wife's relatives, and that there was a strong probability that a reconciliation would be effected between the young man and his pretty wife, Bethel Wiggins Potter Shepard, is authoritatively denied by A. H. Hummel. Mr. Hummel has been retained by Mrs. Shepard as her counsel. He said:

"No reconciliation will be attempted or will take place. Mrs. Shepard has begun a suit for divorce and the case will be pushed through as speedily as possible. We think we have a perfect case."

"There has been a castiron agreement between the lawyers and the parties directly concerning the suit, and the case will be pushed through as speedily as possible. We think we have a perfect case."

Both Living in Seclusion. Those in a position to know assert that Mrs. Shepard is in seclusion not ten miles from the city hall, but that the place of her residence is being kept a profound secret in order that she may be spared the necessity of answering unpleasant questions. Her husband, for similar reasons, is rustling within easy reach of the metropolis.

One of the singular features of this mysterious case is that Mrs. Shepard has not made any application to a justice of the Supreme Court for either alimony or counsel fees. It is reported in Greenport that the wife of the young man has promised Mrs. Shepard a large sum of money—$100,000 is the figure stated—for her support in the event of her being successful in securing the bonds that tie a member of their family to her. This statement, however, cannot be verified.

Noted Dancer Dead. New York, Aug. 19.—Carmencita, the Spanish dancer who made a sensation a few years ago in the United States, is reported to have died at Rio Janeiro, the victim of yellow fever. Carmencita flashed like a tropical bird upon the American public about 15 years ago, and in one season had won a triumph of the first magnitude. She made her first appearance at the Theatre d'Albany, and astonished and delighted her audience with a whirlwind of motion which made her the talk of the town in one night. Then came her tour of the continent, with its flood of money and reputation. But the public soon tired of the strange dancer with the Spanish name, and since then she has been a fair living in small European and South American theaters.
