After they are asked to, we should say. tion of labor in some European countries has bred very demoralizing and destructive ideas. It may be set down as a rule, anyway, that the cheapest labor is the dearest. We should expect that the recent outbarrs of European Anarchies in the States would put an extingulaber upon a good deal of such assisted immigration as has been going on of late, on both sides of the border. What our neighbors are going to do about it is not doubtful; already they have taken the matter up in earnest. The New York These says that the history of nine immigrants recently arrived at that port shows how "the authorities" across the Atlantic try to unpose the state of the production of any temperance man in Parliament who stood up for prohibition as against his own party.
