

smooth their pathway to the river's brink, cannot be told in these pages.

His was a long and beneficent life, not without its share of shade as well as of sun, but underneath its trials and troubles lay the peace that passeth all understanding, undisturbed as are the ocean depths by the storms that rage above. And never for one moment had he cause to call in question the wisdom of his answer, when to the Divine summons he replied :

“ Here am I, Lord, ready to do Thy will.”

THE END.
