From the Montreal Pilot. ELEGANT EXTRACTS, FROM THE TORY PRESS, PATRONIZED BY HIS EXCELLENCY SIR CHARLES METCALFE. BY THE TRIUMVIRATE, & BY THE LEADING MERCHANTS & GENTRY OF MONTREAL.

"Villainous liar,"—"Pennyless Vagabond,"—"Cowardly Blackguard,"—"Cool and steady villainy,"—"Ten mean, irresponsible Tyrants,"—"Political ruffianism."

"We are truly sorry to have to say, that we never remember to have known our city in such a state of excitement as it has been in the last few days, since the years immediately preceding the rebellion of '37."

"The only man to whom we have ever alluded in terms of disrespect and contempt, is Francis Hincks; and we look on him as men look on a ruff, we have the feelings of an English sportsman for noble game; we would not snare a hare, or brimstone a pheasant; even a fox, though a varmint we would see receive fair play; but we put Francis Hincks into the same category with weasels, polecats, stoats, or wolverines, and seek not how he is trapped." Francis Hincks is an interloper amongst us; he came here for the express purpose of kicking up a row, and setting us all by the ears; he isn't complain, if he becomes the first victim of his own evil intentions. We tell Francis Hincks, that Montreal is no place for him; he is evidently quite unaccustomed to associate with men of gentlemanly habits or manners; and the understands not the usage and customs of society."

"A letter threatening Co. Gagny's life, if he took any part in the election, was received by him yesterday. Similar threats have also been held out to other prominent Conservatives."

"Several persons have been severely beaten during the last week, and one stabbed with a bowie-knife, while returning to their homes from the rival meeting. Pistols are also said to have been fired; a very peculiar state of society, truly."

"Before the man Hincks came amongst us, we enjoyed a tranquillity with which the present disturbed and excited state of society contrasts most painfully. Montreal has been no such bitter feeling since the days of the election, and equally bloody fruits with those of that struggle appear to be more than promised to us now. Before this man, whose cool and steady villainy has earned him a well deserved place among the most accomplished rascals of the age, came into our midst, whatever might have been the difference of opinion between parties, there was no personal hostility, no aggression of any kind; men laid down in safety, and rose up without dread; they walked the streets alone and unarmed, without fear and without inter-

"And who is the cause? Hincks, the expelled and degraded Orangeman, the double dyed traitor to his Queen, and those whom his connivance had urged into rebellion—Hincks, who had broken every tie that a man should honor; who has betrayed every cause to which he has been attached—Hincks, the rampant Tory, the red-hot Radical; in politics, in religion, in every respect, a man with a courage capable of the greatest enormity; with a cowardice so great that he dares not meet the gaze of an honest child— a man upon whose head, his dupes and victims have not heaped in their redundancy, more curses, than there are crimes upon his soul; who speckled and striped, venomous and noisome, crawls through the world feared, hated and despised—a man in short who came from his Maker's hand, fashioned and moulded for a devilish scourge, bearing upon his countenance a brand like that of Cain, an index to the heart and mind below, that men might shun him as they would a leper, or use in drawing as a representative of vice convicted, to teach their children from its lineaments how hideous a thing is crime."

"We must make a few comments on the above description of the present state of feeling in Montreal. Far too much honour is done to the very huggable individual who is the author of these remarks, in attributing to him an influence which neither he nor any man less exalted than the Representative of the French population. This language is perhaps rather an exaggerated statement, but it is only too true that there is a wide difference between the public tranquillity which prevailed at the time of Sir Charles Metcalfe's arrival, and the excitement which now exists. And who is the cause? We shall leave it to the people of Canada to answer this question, and they will answer it ere long at the hustings."

"This man has assailed the whole body of the merchants of this city as Bankrupt, he has singled out names, and mixed up with men who have been unfortunate, others who have been more successful, and against whose credit, not a whisper has been breathed until now. He, Francis Hincks, calls other men Bankrupts, he, who were it not for the daily charity of those of his faction, to whose service he is hired, would be a beggar;—he talk of wealth foresooth, he insult those whom the events of the times broke down;—he who with all his salaries, his perquisites, his pilferings from Marriage License Funds, &c., had not the honor to keep within his income;—he talk of Bankrupts—will he tell us how many Executions were in his Ministry, how many have been in it since, and the number of judgments now pending against him?"

"A word or two of comment on the above. We are destined to endure a new species of attack—supra or credit, which we fear just as little as we do any other, and which is as odious as it is shall not disturb our equanimity in the least. We will ask our brethren to order that we ever received a single sixpence out of the Marriage License Fund. We will ask him to name the Sheriff that has ever had an execution against us; the Lawyer that has ever taken the tradesman, and we have dealt with, hundred in Toronto and Kingston, that has ever complained of difficulty in getting his accounts settled. We have been 12 years in Canada, and during the whole of that time there has not been one instance of judgment against us, but we have never been sued, and we venture to assert that no tradesman there has ever dealt with him, or been paid with less than 25s. to the £. If we had written such an article as the above on one of the leading merchants, what a sensation there would have been in St. Paul Street.—The 'Protest' stage. It is a goodly year to you, but never better illustrated than in the case of our leader, or Pelley, by these attacks. The truth of our remarks, cut deep. Every man who reads them, felt their truth, and therefore the representation of the parties who were attacked by them, was beyond all bounds. We, on the other hand, can laugh at the attacks upon our public and private character. If we went to water, gentlemen, you must put on the armor of truth. Allegive epithets and malignant falsehoods will do little to hurt upon yourselves and your party."

Leprosy in New Brunswick. The following remarkable statement we translate from the Canadian, which appears to be indebted for the facts to the New Brunswickian:— The Governor of New Brunswick, Sir William Colebrooke, has sent a message to the Legislature of that Province, on the subject of

"Among the cases enumerated, is that of a female who was shipwrecked at Carquet, on her road to Quebec, and returned to Chatham, where the disease developed itself in her person, and communicated to two inmates of the family in which she resided, and to a child which visited the house, of whom the whole three died. It appears, that the malady is incurable, and invariably terminates in death."

"The reading of the documents which accompanied the message, excited the warm sympathy of the Chamber for the unfortunate sufferers. Drs. Thomson and Earle, expressed their opinions that the disease was not leprosy. The former, in an able speech, pointed out the effects of the mode of living and of the habits of the population among which the disease prevailed. These he declared to be exceedingly faulty, which not only predisposed to scrophulous affections, but rendered such very difficult to remove. He especially recommended a change in the food and mode of living of these poor people, and particularly education and amusement to produce healthy action of both mind and body. The Chamber unanimously voted £500 to the Executive to procure medical assistance, to separate the infected from the healthy population, and to ameliorate the condition of the former as much as possible."
