

THE CANADIAN LITERARY JOURNAL,

A

MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

ORIGINAL CANADIAN AND SELECT LITERATURE,

AND THE

INTERESTS OF CANADIAN LITERARY SOCIETIES.

The object the Proprietors have in publishing this Journal is to afford a medium for Canadian writers, and thereby aid in the development and upbuilding of the national literature of our vast Dominion. We begin with 16 pages (Royal Octavo), but hope, in a very short time, to materially increase its size, and at no very distant day to place it among the foremost magazines on this Continent, both as regards literary worth, cheapness and size.

Already, we have secured the assistance of many of the ablest writers in Canada, who will regularly contribute to the columns of the Journal.

We earnestly solicit contributions from Canadian writers, and will gladly give place to such original articles as are found worthy of publication. For style of articles or poems required, read editorial in No. 1 of the Journal. We are determined to render the Journal first-class in every way, and every energy will be put forth to that end; and we have little doubt that ere long it will reach many thousands of homes throughout the Dominion.
