Sons of the Heather Celebrate Anniversary of Their Patron Saint

'Scotland Yet," "Scotland Forever," hearted expression in the city of Loncelebration of Scotland's patron saint, St. Andrew, held in the L. O. F. Hall, Richmond street, the minds and thoughts of her sons who have left her but ne'er forgotten here were again directed to her banks and braes, her burns and her banks and braes, her burns and lochs, her glens and hills where the purple heatner blooms.

Over two hundred sons of the heather forgotten here were again directed to mained entranced by probably the greatest feast ever provided at a similar function by inspired speakers, speakers in whom seemed to again live the poetic fervor of the ancient bards whose words stirred the fires of patriotism, of stern fidelity to principle, of love of home and rigid adherence to truth that has placed Scotland in the forefront of the nations of the world in religion, education, literature, poetry, engineering, statesmanship and sterling worth of character.

Speaking to the subject of the toast "The Empire," Mr. Eiliott said that the conception of the empire has greatly changed during the last quarter of a century. The old imperialistic ideas have gone and we realize today the great part that the overseas dominions bear in the empire. Today we realize as never before the power of the tender ties that bind us to the mother country.

Mr. Eiliott deprecated as unwise and unsafe if the empire is to remain the great unit that it is at the present time the proposal for an imperial parliament. He saw in such a parliament and its enactment of laws a great danger of friction between the different parts of the far-flung empire.

He believed that the imperial conference, which has been called to meet in May next, can and should be of great aid to the empire through the informal discussion of the various problems of each part, provided that nothing done at the deliberations be binding upon the overseas dominions without the free consent of the people of the Dominion.

Dr. M. C. Dewar spoke briefly to the toast of "The Ladies," and then called on Rev. John Crawford to respond to the toast of "St. Andrew's Society."

"It has been said that Scotchmen are the 'Lost Ten Tribes of Israel,'" said Mr. McKay, "or the stock from which all the tribes sprang. You may not be prepared to accept the assertion, but did you ever notice the likeness of a Scotchman to a good-looking Jew, especially when they both reach the age of white, flowing, patriarchal beards?" He suggested that the Scottish shrewdness in business, the names of many of the clans, and the Gaelic language, were also proofs of the claim of close relationship.

Scenery of Scotland.

In words of poetic fervor that carried his hearers with him to the scenes of which he spoke, Mr. McKay described the scenery of Scotland, not omitting the birds that make their homes even in the most desolate of the mountain spaces; the bees that make the God-history.

The disciples of Hippocrates established the first university at Salerno in century, and here was centred the medical knowledge of Europe. So great was the fame of this medical schoo was the fame of this medical school that students flocked there from all parts of Europe. This school practiced as well as taught the science of medicine. William of Normandy, afterwards the conqueror, was one of its patients. It evidently put iron in his blood. In the course of time, as the population of Europe increased, Salerno became overcrowded. Its efficiency decreased. Students found it both inconvenient and expensive to attend there. Smaller schools were gradually established at more convenient centres where the students could attend nearer home and at less expense. Small universities produced better results, and finally in the early years of the nine-teenth century, after an existence of over one thousand years, the once famous university closed its doors.

The same policy of centralization produced the same results in France. Under the successors of Charlemagne, Paris had over thirty flourishing colleges. In the year 1200, Philip Augustus conceived and carried out the idea of combining all these colleges into one great university. From that time the great university of Paris began to decline, and finally closed its doors before the end of the eighteenth century. For hundreds of years England tried the centralization policy of university education at Oxford and Cambridge, but it failed to meet the needs of the people, and now, following the example of Germany, England is dotted with universities. The University of Liverpool was established in 1903, and the 1906 it had an enrolment of 2,854 more students than Oxford and Cambridge combined.

The wisdom and experience of centuries prove that the opportunities for that students flocked there from all Morale hawking, shuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh will be gone.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh—Relief comes so quickly,—Advt.

"Financier" On School Question Is All Wrong.

BURDEN FOR PEOPLE

They Had Twenty Mills Added to Taxes-Let Citizens of Future Help Pay For Schools.

That more than a million dollars will be saved in interest by making a direct levy for school building instead of issuing thirty year debentures is absolutely absurd, according to Ald. O. I. Cunningham, chairman of the city council finance committee.

The "financier" who advanced the plan argued that with the interest at six per cent it would require $2,173,467 to pay off the debt and that this could be saved by a direct tax. Such a tax for a school costing $400,000 would be only eight mills he argued. He did not mention that for a school of $800,000 it would be gixteen mills or for a million dollars that it would be twenty mills.

Ald. Cunningham contends that the plan is absolutely impracticable. He doubted if any citizen would be prepared to face an immediate eightmill addition to the tax rate. In addition to that he pointed out that no actual saving would be effected for the people.

"It is true that the city as a whole would were the propared to the propagation of the people."

con to that he pointed out that no actual saving would be effected for the people.

"It is true that the city as a whole would save the interest it ordinarily pays on expenditures of this kind, but the individual citizens would lose it," said Ald. Cunningham. It is as broad as it is long and it is better for the city as a whole to pay the interest than for the individual taxpayer. Under the plesent system the citizen pays only a small amount each year and has the remainder of the money for his own use.

"Besfdes this, it is not fair that the citizen of today should pay the entire cost of education for the next thiry years. When the cost is divided over the whole period the new citizens pay their share of it as well as the older ones."

The wisdom and experience of centuries prove that the opportunities for and advantages of higher education should be brought to the people and give all classes, so far as possible, an equal chance to rise in the scale of civilization. Money cannot make brains, and hence it should be used by governments and people to assist brains where they can be found far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife.
