ldren will be up in arms against' them, Therefore, every man allable is needed for the army.

The violent battle of Trentino still rages, with the Austrian troops they had evacuated Punta Cordin, on the Asiago plateau, and evacuated drew on the southern slopes of this mountain. But in the Lagarina Valley, their ground and annihilated the powerful storming columns of Austrians the Taro Brigade won distinction by sallying from their trenches and pursutheir part, make boastful claims and speak of "conquering" the following Punta Cordin and Monte Priafora. They assert that since the offensive be-

What appears to be the actual case in the Trentino is this: The Austrians began the battle by attempting to force their way down the Adige by carrying the Italian positions in the Lagarina Valley. These have been solidly held for over a week, and so following the line of least resistance the enemy has spread out his attacks like the Germans did before Verdun after they were halted on the line Cote du Poivre (Douaumont ridge), to Vaux and were compelled to divert their surplus forces to attacks on the western bank of the Meuse. The Italians, on their right wing, like the French, on their left wing, have withdrawn from their forward covering positions. Some of the places mentioned by the Austrians as captured were among the eight towns and other positions abandoned in the No Man's Land, between the two armies. The Austrians now speak of their efforts as being directed merely to the "expulsion" of the Italians from Austrian

In the struggle before Verdun the French utilized the lull in the German attempts to capture Le Mort Homme by rushing a strong field work which the enemy had just constructed on the southwestern slopes of this position, and with it they captured 220 Germans and seven machine guns. The lines about Cumieres were the centre of the latest furious struggle. The transition stage between war of position and war of manoeuvre which the fighting here has reached was shown by the ability of the Germans to make some progress in their assaults from the southern outskirts of the village towards Chattancourt and by the swing of the pendulum backward when the French rallied and forced the enemy to retreat to the village. The fact that German detachments were able to progress along the Meuse under cover of a fog and appear on the heights of Chattancourt station before they were observed and "annihilated" by the French artillery is also signifiof the transitional condition of the fighting. The Germans have so far shown nothing original. One day they attack Le Mort Homme with great fury and intensity. The next day or week they attack Hill 304 and Avocourt wood and so on in rotation.

Various interviews, including that of Count Tisza, Hungarian premier, hinting at peace and stating that Germany has gained all she has desired, etc., that have been sent out from Berlin, are undoubtedly in part published for the purpose of educating the German public for a new phase of the war as understood by the central powers, the final embarking on a defensive policy purely and simply, in order to conserve their remaining reserves. Germany has been denied the occupation of Paris and the capture of Verdup; she will be denied these objectives unless some extraordinary accident happens, and so she has to prepare for resistance to the allied offensive. But she is being thrown on the defensive after her offensive powers have about exhausted, and a defensive in the latter stages of a war never wins it if the enemy knows his business.

Gen. Smuts, commander-in-chief of the British expeditionary force in East Africa, reports that he has carried the invasion further into the interior and that the column which is advancing down the Panagni River has reached the south end of the Egare Mountains and has got in touch with enemy near Nikocheni. The enemy is occupying a strong entrenched lition on a narrow neck of land between the mountains and the Panagni

SUMMER OPERA AT GRAND.

"MRS. BUMPSTEAD-LEIGH."

The big seven-act feaure, "Sherlock Holmes," will continue to be presented at the Strand Theatre for the remainder of this week. It is proving a great attraction, and no wonder, for it is one of the strongest and best photo-plays that have been seen in Toronto for a very long while. The photography is just about as near perfection as motion picture photography can be. The story is one of the tensest interest thruout, interest which never fails or flags for a second. William Gillette, in the title role, is Conan Doyle's inimitable creation to the very life, and Maupain, playing opposite to him, makes an ideal "emperor of crooks." The Goldberg Boob comedy, which also figures on the bill, has a laugh in every second. Next week the Chaplin fans will have a turn, for "Police," Charlie Chaplin's latest, and (it is said) his best, will be presented at the Strand, and howhere else in town, the first half of next week.

Lasky production of "The Love Mask," which was written especially for her by Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the Lasky Company, and Jeanie MacPhorson, author of "The Golden Chance." Dressed in true western bandit style, the fair star drops from an overhanging limb to the top of a stage and holds up the passengers. Miss Ridgley and Wallace Reid, who is co-starred with her in this production, are supported by a cast of unusual excellence. Also on the bill are a Paramount Travelogue and comedy "Oh, Doctor," with Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare.
