

FAMOUS DERBY CHARACTER DEAD

Davy Stephens, Once News-boy, was Recognized by Many Celebrities.

Son of Engineer, Started Selling Papers at Nine to Support Mother.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Davy Stephens is dead; thousands who have been to the Derby remember him, for the Kingstown newsagent—he sold papers on the quay for many years—always came over to Epsom.

He would wait for hours, wearing a silk hat, at the entrance to the grand stand, hoping to shake hands with the King, Lord Lonsdale, Lord Derby—any celebrity. He was more fond of celebrities than any American.

Davy was good-natured and polite. He would go the rounds, year after year, during his visit to London, renewing his acquaintance with the famous people to whom he had sold newspapers when he landed in Ireland. Years ago, people like Sir Henry Irving always received him when he called; more recently Jimmy Wilde and Steven Donoghue always shook his hand.

He prized to the end a half-sovereign the present King gave him for a penny paper when he was Duke of York—a medal, too, that Queen Victoria conferred on him. When he was alive, Lord Marcus Beresford always gave him a ticket for the grand stand at Epsom; in the evening he would go to see Tree act. Sir Herbert usually invited him.

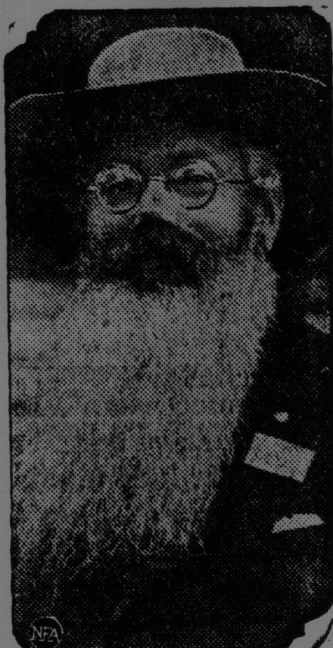

Davy saw fifty-five Derbys, and, in later years, when everybody knew him, he must have shaken hands a thousand times. He always had a Derby tip, and he was right more times than he was wrong.

FAMOUS PATRONS
To the end he talked of his former patrons—Palmerston, Parnell, Peel, Cobden, Tennyson, the Emperor of Brazil, the Shah of Persia, Bismarck, General Booth and the Prince Imperial.

He was the son of a civil engineer, but as his father died when he was four years old, he started selling papers when he was only nine to support his mother and sisters.

The latter provides that the pact shall not take effect unless Germany is admitted to the League of Nations. Article six states that the agreement reserves to all parties the rights granted them by the treaty of Versailles and also guarantees to the same nations the rights acquired with their Allies and guaranteed by other powers. The correspondent explains that by this article France intends to have Germany acknowledge France as guarantor of the treaties of arbitration which the German Government, according to its note of September 2, is about to conclude with Poland and Czechoslovakia.

EQUAL TREATMENT URGED BY MEIGHEN

Freight Rate Fixation Must be Applied to Whole Dominion, He Says.

Canadian Press.
VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 7.—"If a principle of freight rate fixation cannot be applied to the whole Dominion, it cannot be applied at all," said Right Hon. Arthur Meighen here last night, referring to the recent order concerning grain and flour rates.

He had been accused of opposing the recent order of Chief Commissioner H. A. McKeown and Commissioner Frank Oliver, affecting grain and flour. Never before coming to British Columbia had he ever referred to that order, and his only utterance had been to the effect that the basis on which rates should be fixed can only be ascertained and recommended by the railway commission and that political interference by order-in-council or otherwise could only injure the prestige of the commission.
