Humor and Philosophy By DUNCAN M. SMITH. Copyright, 1914, by Duncan M. Smith. PERT PARAGRAPHS

It is because the world is free that the beautiful show does not draw larger crowds.

Nothing appears to do a woman quite so much good as to see a man passing a lawn mower on a hot day.

It is said to be a greater crime to steal a loaf of bread than a million dollars. But the thief does not often have the opportunity to commit the lesser crime.

What is sauce for the goose the gander may turn up his nose at because it is not flavored with brandy.

Uncle Sam is a poor hand to drive a bargain. He did not make the Panama company give trading stamps with its coal.

It is no argument to say that the horse is a vegetable. The mule is likewise.

A woman not only has the last word, but she usually has the fifty or hundred preceding the last one.

A man never looks on a woman as playing the fiddle, according to his own true report, but he frequently comes out "just about even."

A Snap For a Man. They are looking for a man. Dark in a much worse than could see. And when a star shines through the air. Of course he should not be there.

As Dangerous a Plaything. "Primitive man had to get along without the automobile."

The Summer Boarder. In regard to the summer boarder there is yet another side. We only hear about it from the standpoint of the lady who has been lured into the country by the seductive advertisement and dumped down on a spot that had already been pre-empted by a colony of mosquitoes and where the canned goods of summer serve as a poor substitute for fresh country vegetables.

Cause and Effect. He ate a piece of hard pie. And when he had a second dream. And thought the nightmare was a team. He couldn't figure why.

A Family Resemblance. "The peck sock must be of the cat family."
