He spoke of Canada, which he described as the greatest and most presperous of our self-governing colonies at the present time. This colony, he said, was now in the full swing of extraordinary prosperity, which he hoped and believed would result in a great in strength and importance. He fecalled that Canada in 1939 voluntarily offered Great Britain as preference of 15 per cent., which it had since increased to 31-2 per cent. and he pointed out how British trade with Canada has since grown. Canada, he added, was now willing to go further, especially regarding goods in which the British com-
