was thought he would do, and he believed it would be found that the secessionists would fall away from the ranks of Lord Salisbury when they found that they had received no appoint-ments. If eviction was pressed in Ireland he thought there might beindividual disturbances here and there, but there would be no organized political troubles, because the Irish people understood the position of affairs perfectly. As to the suppression of the National League, that could never take place because it was an English as well as an Irish institu-tion, and it would require an act of Parlia-ment to bring this to pass, which would be very difficult of accomplishment, as they num-bered eighty six Home Rulers and would be sure to have a great many Radicals with them. There had been something said about an or-ganized attempt on behalf of the Irish people to avoid paying their rent. He did not believe that anything of the kind would occur, of course, in some cases it was impossible for the people to pay their rent, as they were without means. In speaking of the appointment of a com-

In speaking of the appointment of a com-mission to induire as to the tenure and pur-chase of land in Ireland, mentioned in the Queen's speech to-day, he said that was one ed of the many ways the Tories had of evading a question, and that it only meant delay to the mable them to formulate some definite plan for dealing with the Irish question. He spoke of his recent defeat in Derry, and said the case would come up for hearing before Mr. Justice O'Brien, who was an enemy to the panse of Home Rule, he having been defeated by a friend of Parnell in his contest at Ennis. As to his return to Europe, Mr. McCarthy waid he intended to go back for the opening of Parliament on the 6th of February. He had not come here on any political mission of any

Parliament on the 6th of February. He had to not come here on any political mission of any or citical, but to give political tectures for his own purpose. He had come as a literary man, rather in than a politician, and intended to lecture on the "English House of Parliament," the "Irish National Cause," "English Polities," and one to retwo other subjects, and endeavor to give in the American people a fair view of hings on the other side. The Irish beople, he added, felt perfectly sat-side with the defeat of Mr. Gladstone's in ictory rather than a defeat, for when they commenced the fight eight years ago, they had aut eight or nine Home Rulers, while when a f Commons last March, they had 311. Underneath these great cakes of nee and snow, the materials constituting this glacier, and which are piled together in the wildest of disorder, runs a living stream of water, soursing through this darkened passage with the rumble of a thousand carts. Be-rough from the ice at last, it boils up-ward from beneath the glacier front, then mingles with the waters of the bay, and flows off to the sea. The constant wear of this sunless river, acting with all other causes, forces large masses of ice to break away from the main body, and as they fall a roar as though a hundred cannon were discharged wakens the echoes, and great columns of water as the glacier crashes or when a mass of snow and ice tottering a moment falls headlong from the whitened diff into the boiling waters below. The scene is grand beyond all conception, and singues all expression of admiration. The vir-any wonders of nature equal this glacier of un-told age, as it moves silently yet irresistibly down from its birthplace to the sea, the very embodiment of strength, the destroyer of all life within its reach.
