

The mad mattress caper

*Surely you jest.
No?*

But no one starts a medieval story "Once Upon a Mattress" and then invites the public to see it. You could start it "Once Upon a Time" and write some in digs around a chick of that name.

You'd get away with it, and the censor would never know until he finishes next month's Playboy.

"If the revel hath no redeeming social importance, then that revel shall not be publicly performed since it will corrupt the minds of our youth."

That is the law enacted by our benevolent King.

Ann Wheeler as Princess Winnifred and John Ethier as Prince Dauntless of redeeming social importance? You've been to too many cast parties.

I mean, just look at that debauched crowd—why if SMUT were written across those low-cut (hee-hee) dresses it couldn't be more plain.

So you call yourselves Jubilaires and you're going to do it Feb. 16-18 in the Jubilee Auditorium?

We'll see about that.
