

nothing could detract from or mar the picturesqueness of its site. Beautiful for situation then as now, though not yet "crowned with towers," she stood, looking out upon the foaming Chaudière, or the more placid waters of the river at her feet, seeing, with prophetic vision, the grand future before her, and herself the fairest of the daughters of the great Dominion yet to be.