A man in his carriage was riding along, A gatly dressed wife by his side; In satin and laces she looked like a queer And he like a king in his pride.

A wood sawyer stood on the street as they passed;
The carriage and couple he eyed;
Andsaid, as he worked with his saw on a log,
'I wish I was rich and could ride."

what was present with Ellice as she sat behind the arbor, causing the pain at her beart.

Presently two people came down the garden walk together and entered the arbor; Ellice did not hear their steps. But when a man spoke she heard that. It was Charles Vane's voice that was sounding in her ears, and he had called the name of Maud Danforth. These two were conversing about no commonplace subject. No! and if Miss Danforth was only flirting with Vane, she had secured her victim firmly; and if it was more than a flirtstion on her part, she had achieved a victory, for he was pour ing forth passionate words.

Hust a fearful fact became apparent. The overturned shell would not sustain the weight of both of them. It was slowly, slowly sinking.

"Oh Heaven!" gasped Maud, "Oh Heaven!" gasped Maud, "Must we die?"

Ellice knew that these two were suffering for the wrong that they were doing her. Should she hide her pain and help them? She took the name of Maud Danforth. These two were conversing about no commonplace subject. No! and if Miss Danforth was only flirting with vane, she had secured her victim firmly; and if it was more than a flirtstion on her part, she had achieved a victory, for he was pour ing forth passionate words.
