To-day, Mr. Jas. Tennant was again brought up for the continuation of his trial. He was put upon the stand, and again asked to swear but he refused to give evidence criminating himself. Mr. Lugrin contended for his commitment, but the magistrate refused: and the case was postponed till the 12th prox., when application will be made to the Full Bench for a mandamus ordering Mr. Tennant's commitment. The magistrate then, in effect, ridiculed Judge Weldon's "order" for release, and said that Judge had no right to make such an order.

Messrs Simpson and Robinson left here for the Tay, Saturday evening last by waggon, taking with them "old suits." poles and general accompaniments. They reached a quiet part of the Tay early yesterday morning, and shed down the stream. Before noon, they had taken seven dozen beautiful trout. Mr Simpson on describing the brook says it is necessary to wade in it, and that they stood to their middle in the water for hours. They used both bait and fly; and are so much impressed with the place, and the accommodation near it, that they recommend all disciples of Ike to go there. They reached here in good season, yesterday, pretty well bronzed. Black flies Mr Simpson says, "have not yet evolved; but there is a genuine mosquito hum."
