CHAPTER IV.
WHAT A SWEET REVENGE.
AFTER all, why should he be denied every happiness in life because of a misfortune that was not his fault?
 That was the thought that smouldered through the density that was upon his heart and brain.
 Loyd-Mostyn gave him a little push.
 "Go!" he said breathlessly. "Go, and God bless you."
 And Devereux went.
 With an excitement that was painful, Loyd-Mostyn watched until Erle joined her. He distinctly saw the flush with which she received him, the almost tender embarrassment of her manner; then he turned away with a triumphant exclamation.
 "What an easy victory!" he muttered. "God! What a revenge it will be. Ha, ha! I can scarce control my impatience until the knot has been tied, and then, Duchess—ha, ha—then my time will come. Humiliation for humiliation, only we shall see whose will be hardest to bear."

CHAPTER V.
THEIR LOVE REVEALED.
ERLE DEVEREUX was flushed and breathless when he reached the side of the fair girl among the flowers, a condition that met with its own response.

restraint upon himself to prevent himself from taking her in his arms. His heart was beating to suffocation. In that moment he forgot that he was not what he represented himself; he felt that he was the poor nobleman as an act of genius confounds himself with the role that he essays.
 "Do you think," she asked slowly, haltingly, pulling at the silk mull that garlanded her hat, "that we, my parents and I, appreciate you for what you have? It is the last thing that we ever consider. You know there was a time when we had the same misfortune ourselves. It was before I was born, before my father was born, even; but it sometimes seems to me that I have never forgotten it, and I am quite sure father never has, though it so far antedates his birth I am sorry that my father did not know, because I feel certain that he could give you advice that would materially benefit you. Will you promise me to tell him? And now there is all the more reason why you should remain our guest until you have decided upon your future. I am almost glad that you are not to leave us for England, even if we are not to see you. But you will remain for the present?"
 He shook his head sadly.
 "No," he replied, with a curious intonation; "I hope that you will not insist, because the temptation would be too strong for me. I should feel that there never was such a yet whose poverty prevented procurement."
 Her eyes were lowered, a sweet tremulous smile played about her mouth. She was evidently trying to say something, but it was a very difficult thing to select the words. She hesitated a moment, then shot him a fleeting glance. It seemed to set his heart on fire.
 "Does poverty transform an honor into presumption?" she asked, her expression staggering under her happiness.
 He half arose, drawing himself closer to her. He made no attempt to disguise his excitement. He put out his hand and clasped hers.
 "Do you realize that you are humoring a madness?" he questioned so huskily that his words were almost unintelligible. "Do you realize that you are giving me the privilege of saying that which may eternally offend you? I have tried until I have been entirely exhausted, my strength I keep back words which will persist in rising to my lips; and you are, perhaps unconsciously, encouraging me to break a silence that contains my one chance for happiness. I do not wish to say that which will cause you to send me from you with a feeling that will make friendship between us in future an impossibility."
 She did not withdraw her hand, but on the contrary, he fancied he felt some answering pressure in the soft dainty fingers. She was silent, and with his heart upon his lips he spoke again.
 "Why do you not command me to be silent?" he asked with curious calm. "Why do you not send me from you before you allow me to expose my madness? Oh, Duchess, when a man loves as I love you, the hardest thing under God's heaven is for him to keep silent, no matter how strongly honor may cry out against it."
 Her eyes flashed back to his; the smile had not vanished from her cheeks, but her lips, the happiness of her expression caused a little cry of rapture to escape him.
 "There was never any honor that cried out against the honest love of a man," she replied, bending slightly toward him. "If you think that your lack of money could ever make a difference to me, or my parents, I you think there is anything that could ever influence me against a man by just his own conduct, you accuse me incorrectly and unjustly. I am like the Puritan maiden, Priscilla, when John Alden pleaded the cause of Miles Standish. Speak for yourself, John, and don't allow the accident of financial difference to mar the happiness of a life."
 There was nothing bold or unmaidenly in her speech. It was uttered in the sweetest and most embarrassed way, but she could not let the man she loved with her whole soul go from her for want of a little encouragement, when her heart was speaking so strongly for him.

 If he had loved her before, he adored her then. She seemed to have drawn into play every element in his nature. He forgot their surroundings, forgot that they were in the light of day, where a thousand eyes might be upon them; but, drawing himself closer to her, he reclined there at her side, holding her hand closely, his eyes fixed upon hers with burning excitement.
 "You know that I adore you!" he cried, his face flushed, his eyes brilliant under their passion. "I have always revered women without believing that I could ever love; but from the first moment that I saw you I knew that my heart had gone forever out of my keeping. I have wished to go away, because I have felt that my passion was hopeless. I have felt that there was not the slightest chance that my love could ever meet with reciprocation, and I have tried to conceal it, that you might never learn of my presumption; but I have loved too madly for that. Tell me that you are not offended, Duchess. Tell me that I did not misunderstand the tenderness of your heart when you spoke to me but now! Tell me that I am indeed John Alden, and that my punishment will not be banishment for having spoken, but that you will have been actively interested in promoting the best interests of our Kirk for many years. Both in the office of manager and treasurer, which you worthily filled, and in the willing performance of all the other duties that fell to your lot, you have ever striven to further the welfare of your congregation."

Was Likewise Excused.
 In a southern county of Missouri years ago, when the form of questioning was slightly different from now, much trouble was experienced in getting a jury in a trial for killing. Finally an old fellow answered every question satisfactorily; he had no prejudices, was not opposed to capital punishment, and was generally considered a reliable find. Then the prosecutor said solemnly:
 "Juror, look upon the prisoner; 'rimmer, look upon the juror.' The old man adjusted his spectacles and peered at the prisoner for a full half minute. Then, turning to the court, he said:
 "Judge, damned if I don't believe he's guilty!"—Kansas City Star.

Very Enjoyable Church Social.

Presentation of Address, &c., to Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Munn, soon to sever their connection with the town.
 Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Munn, who will leave shortly for British Columbia, where they will settle down, were the guests last night of the whole Presbyterian congregation, and a most enjoyable social was held at the beautiful residence of Mrs. Archibald, sr. The members of the Ladies' Aid, of which Mrs. Munn had been a most untiring worker, had arranged for a picture of the old Kirk (so dear to the hearts of all) with a number of the congregation standing by the entrance. This photo was taken by Mr. R. T. Parsons, and was indeed a beautiful piece of work. The picture, about 16 x 20 inches, was presented to Mrs. Munn and will, we feel sure, be highly prized as a reminder of the pleasant days spent in Harbor Grace. The ladies also presented Mrs. Munn with a nicely worded address, for which the latter lady thanked them most sincerely. The Rev. F. S. Coffin, the highly esteemed pastor of the little flock, next read the address to Mr. Munn, and referred to Mr. Munn's constant attention to his duties as Secretary and Treasurer, as well as his various other willingly given services to St. Andrew's congregation. Mr. Munn replied in a few well chosen words, with a sincere wish for the success of the Kirk and happiness and success for all the members of the congregation. Addresses were given by Rev. Mr. Coffin, Mr. James Cron, Mr. Ed. Parsons, Mr. H. H. Archibald, Dr. Parsons, Mr. Jas. D. Munn, Mr. N. Munn, Mr. O. V. Travers and others. A very pleasant hour was spent. Mr. and Mrs. Munn and family will take with them the best wishes of a host of friends both here and at St. John's. The following is the address, which was printed on white satin and looked very pretty:
ADDRESS.
 Dear Brother—We, the pastor, office bearers, members and adherents of St. Andrew's congregation, Harbor Grace, on this the occasion of your departure from amongst us, desire to express our high appreciation and esteem. We would remember that you have been actively interested in promoting the best interests of our Kirk for many years. Both in the office of manager and treasurer, which you worthily filled, and in the willing performance of all the other duties that fell to your lot, you have ever striven to further the welfare of your congregation.

Two Peaks Conquered

Swiss Guides Ascended to Summits in Rockies Hitherto Unscaled.
 The Rockies are "more dangerous than the Swiss Alps, and are just as good for climbing," said Edward Fenz, junior, who, with his father, Edward Fenz, his brother Ernest, and their fellow Swiss Rudolf Aemmer, four Swiss guides who spent the summer on the Rocky Mountains, around Field, Laggan and Glacier, arrived at the Windsor station this morning on their way home to Switzerland for a visit.
 The season has been an eventful one. Two mountains which have never before been climbed, though often attempted, have succumbed; Mount Douglas, 11,220 feet, and Mount Faudra, 10,200 feet. Dr. Hickson, of Montreal, was the first man after Fenz to put his feet upon these summits, last July.

Death-List is Forty-Three.

Heartrending Scenes After Cars Crashed—No Doctors Within Miles—Officials Holding an Investigation Every Family in Bluffton, Indiana, Has Lost Member or Friend Through This Shocking Accident.
 BLUFFTON, Ind., Sept. 22.—D. E. Wilson, conductor of one of the two interurban cars which were wrecked here last night with a loss of 43 lives, tells the following graphic story of the wreck:
 "I was going toward the rear of my car to get the keys from my locker with which to unlock a switch that we were approaching. This switch has a dead end and unless it were unlocked we would have run into the ground. We were then about a quarter of a mile from Kingsland. Suddenly all the stuff in the car began to pile up around me. I did not hear any crash, or any noise. Things just seemed to rise up all around me and I could not do anything to stop them.
 "Then I lost consciousness, I guess, for the next thing I knew I was in the Grove near the wreck. I do not remember of hearing any screams or any particular amount of noise. The

It took, said Fenz, 17 hours to climb Mount Douglas, and 20 hours to get to the top of Mount Faudra. Mount Douglas was the most difficult ascent in mountain climbing he had ever accomplished in the Rockies. When they got down again they did not know how they had been able to get up. In the middle of Douglas' straight walls all around the peak there is a drop of 1,000 feet, which has contributed with other little discomforts to keep back previous climbers. To help his companions to the apex Fenz had to put a rope round a rock and throw the rope down for an eighty feet slip-up against the perpendicular.
 Fenz, junior, looks in splendid health. He certainly gets plenty of fresh air. Fenz answered all questions in English, and first-class English he speaks. He has had seven years experience in climbing in the Rockies, with one visit home, when he married. When he comes back next June he will, he says, bring his wife with him. During the winter he goes to Adelboden for the skating competitions.
 In addition to climbing the two previously unconquerable peaks, these guides have taken Dr. Hickson twice to the top of Mount Assiniboine, 11,800 feet high. Although these Swiss guides have left, a cousin remains at Field, where he has a wife and home, and will act as guide.

Dead Laid in Rows.
 The spot where the disaster took place is isolated. There was not a doctor in Kingsland and the people of the village seemed paralyzed by the immensity of the death roll. They lacked a leader and until the relief cars from Fort Wayne and Bluffton arrived little was done to take the dead and injured from the wreckage. It was a long hard task to remove the victims. The dead and injured were laid in rows at the side of the tracks. Farmers' wives brought sheets to cover the dead and to make bandages for the wounded.
 Legs and arms were severed, heads were cut off, and strips were torn from the flesh of the victims. Because of the broken bones, the victims were terribly distorted, the bodies being entangled with the timbers of the crushed cars.
 To add to the horror of the scene, flies settled on the dead and injured in great swarms. All the time pending the arrival of the physicians, the injured were writhing and screaming in pain and the crowd that had gathered about them stood helpless to aid them.
