

MACKENZIE HAS COME, HURRAH!

Alas—THE CAMPBELL ARE COMING.
The Government's hummel an' a', an' a',
The Tories oot runnel an' a', an' a',
The Government hummel, the Tories oot a', Whilk gars them look hummel an' a', an' a', Mackenzie is coming, Macdonald's a',
For union an' progress hurrah! hurrah!

When Johnnie, an' George, an' Hughie, an' Tam Colesget together, an' made up a plan For gullin' the people oot o' like a'ashaw, It's gullin' gullin' I think they're a', Mackenzie is coming, hurrah! hurrah!
Macdonald is running awa', awa',
Mackenzie is coming, Macdonald's a', Wi' Tupper, oot-fishing an' a', an' a'.

For gidsake man Hughie unlock the big kist, An' forty-five thousand count into my fist, Or else our elections are no worth a straw, An' the Pacific Contract will gae the wa', Mackenzie is coming, hurrah! hurrah!
Macdonald is running awa', awa',
Mackenzie is coming, Macdonald's a',
For another ten thousand, hurrah! hurrah!

Ye've given the Yankees oot o' the pine forests a', Ye might as well gae them o' the pine forests a',
The cut an' oot while a' tree they could fa', Did ye ever hear the like o' John A. John A.
Mackenzie is coming, hurrah! hurrah!
Macdonald is running awa', awa', Corruption an' bribery have gotten a', An' a' buried by Blake an' Mackenzie for a'.

Ye've opened the River St. Lawrence for all, Wi' free navigation through every canal, For leave the catch fish whaur there's nae fish at a', Ca' ye that diplomacy, John A. John A.
Mackenzie is coming, hurrah! hurrah!
Macdonald is running awa', awa',
An' honest Reformers are crying hurra, For Blake and Mackenzie, hurrah! hurrah!

The Rival Clansmen
A Scottish Vendetta.

"When I reached the summit of the shoulder I found that I had lost distance in climbing, for the Caterans were now a considerable way in advance, and could be but dimly seen moving like spectres along by the side of the ridge where the mountain runs up to its sheer height.

"But, breathless and panting as I was, I darted forward. Here a loud rushing noise was made by the mountain streams leaping and bubbling downwards over the rocks, and there was less fear of being detected. Sheltering myself for a brief moment behind each boulder and jutting crag to fix my route to the next, I rapidly gained upon them. But when they had got to the far end of the corrie the men in advance halted and waited on Ian and your son to come up.

"When Ian had joined them a consultation took place which was heard by neither myself nor Hector, for he was removed to some distance in charge of two of the Caterans until the consultation was finished.

"By this time I was convinced that I knew their destination—the cave. For it was just beside the concealed entrance to it that the group with Ian in their midst was standing. And in my suspicion I was soon proved to be right. A signal was given to those in charge of Hector to come forward, and then advanced to the entrance, where Ian gave a peculiar cry resembling the cry of an owl. This was answered, and I then became aware that a party of Caterans had been already stationed in the cave.

"In a few seconds every man of them had entered, and, treading as softly and cautiously as I could, I approached the entrance and listened, but I heard no more, and dreading to stay longer, I turned and descended the mountain by another way than that by which I had ascended, for I was afraid that I might have met others of the Caterans by taking the same path to return by."

"It was bravely done," said the Chief, taining, gazing admiringly at the old woman. "Many men would not have ventered on a mission so fraught with danger."

"Ah, but M'Leod," she replied earnestly, "one will do much when there is a great interest at stake—much for the fulfilment of an object upon which their heart is bent."

"You speak truly." And, as the Chief replied, a tear dimmed his eye.
"But," he continued, "I do not understand what your interest could have specially been in following the Caterans to their hiding-place."

"Ah! that ye may live to know yet, M'Leod; and marvel not though it may turn out to concern you or yours. I heard Ian M'Kenzie utter words to your son which told me it was time to act.
Think not, M'Leod, that I have wandered about all these years without a mission. I have suffered much, borne much; but the one idea have I clutched with my whole strength, and the time has well nigh come when I must strike, and fearlessly. It takes a bold, fearless determination to meet the wiles of such men as Donald Cameron and Ian M'Kenzie."

The old man was silent for a second or two. Then he said—

"The M'Kenzies have already caused me much suffering, and, if they are able, appear willing to cause me more. With Donald Cameron I have had stormy words long ago, but thought not that he was a man to keep alive enmity as he has done. But from me and my kinsmen, as well as from you, they need expect nothing but fear, and determined action. The M'Kenzies already have felt the weight of my arm, and Black Cameron may yet bring it down upon him. If I succeed in finding my son none the worse of his being in their hands to-night, I will retire without more action in regard to the matter; but if his life be gone, or if he be injured, or if I find him not, then will my vengeance overtake all who may have had to do with his capture."

"M'Leod," said the old woman, looking up into the face of the Chief, after apparently musing upon something which concerned her much, "do you know aught of this niece of Cameron's with whom your son is in love, and whom Ian M'Kenzie seems so desirous to marry?"

"I know but little of her; my son has scarcely ever mentioned her name before me, unless perhaps during a banter with his aunt. Diffidence, I suppose, kept him from speaking of her to me."

"Do you know that she is a pen-less girl, and said to be ill-begotten?"

"I have heard it. Hector has opened his heart freely to my sister, who communicated much of what he had said to me."

"And do you think he does no wrong in bringing as the lady of Castle M'Leod a girl who is a bastard and who cannot bring a merk to either master—cannot point to the family of her sire—who may have a foal blood in her veins?"

The old man replied for a moment.
A wife in Guelph, Ohio, has demanded a divorce from her husband that upon one point her brutal husband "put her in the rain-water barrel!"
