The discussion soon became regular and strictly in touch with the subject, proving exceedingly interesting to both debaters and listeners. The debate was followed by a paper entitled "Epic and Dramatic Poetry," contributed by Mr. J. L. Goodburne. The club adjourned after some comment on the paper. Next Monday evening Mr. W. J. Imlach will present an essay on "Bells." There will also be a discussion on the subject, "Resolved, that the study of the dead languages should be discontinued."

"Good Old Times."

One of the largest audiences ever seen in the Grand Opera House was that of Monday night, when "Good Old Times," the joint production of Wilson Barrett and Hall Caine, was presented. The Brooklyn Park Theater Company, under the management of Col. W. Sinn and W. L. Sinn, gave what was beyond doubt the best drama seen on London's stage in many months if not seasons. The plot is novel, and the costuming and scenery such as to produce decidedly realistic effects. A novel effect of fire-flies filting from bush to bush was especially admired. Scene after scene succeeded each other in which the dramatic intensity was truly praiseworthy, and the unexpected details of the plot proved so interesting that anything slightly overdone was overlooked. The play deserved the immense audience that greeted it, and the warmest praise accorded to "Good Old Times" by the press of the continent has indeed been merited.
