For, although not a single life had been lost, even by the falling of a brick or a beam, it was nevertheless a real tragedy that had just been played; for the sudden destruction of a great theater means den destruction of a great theater means worse than death to hundreds, While the members of the company who happened to be present became able to think of their losses, the pickpockets of their losses, the pickpockets of their gains, the respectable spectators of going home, and the rabble of beer, the carpenters who had lost their foots and the musicians who had lost their instruments, of suicide.

ments, of suicide.

"I wouldn't have lost that sight for a thousand pounds," said Barton, turning carelessly to the young musician, who happened to be standing just behind him. "Hanged lucky, though, that the walls fell in instead of out. It was within the turning of a brick that some of us never saw a theater again, outside or in. Sic

On hearing himself addressed, the other started as if from a dream.
"You call it lucky!" he exclaimed, in a tone of scorn that was as un-English as his accent.

Barton first started then laughed good-Barton first stared, then laughed good-humoredly. "Did you want a brick on your head, then? I didn't—at least, not before supper. After that, perhaps—"

"As on what?"

'As on that—as on my violin."
"You belong to the orchestra, then?" "I did, I suppose."
"Poor beggar! then I'm sorry for you." He was perfectly sober now, and yet he spoke lightly. Nevertheless, as he spoke he thrust his hand into his trousers' pocket. But it came out

"Curse it!" he exclaimed, "not a farthing. Why, I had ever so many shillings this morning—four, at least. I say, Warden—do you carry a purse? Just lend me something or other."

Warden, who had now fairly recovered his composure, but was still ignorant of his obligations to his preserver from death, slowly drew out his purse and handed it to Barton, who held it out, without looking to see what it contained, to the unfortunate musician. "Never to the unfortunate musician. "Never mind the fiddle," he said, "one's as good

But he to whom it was offered drew back, placed his hands behind his back, and bowed.

"Je suis gentilhomme," he said, with some dignity.

"A gentleman are you? Then go and be hanged for one," shouted Barton; and, taking Warden's arm, stalked off again. as another, I suppose.

His companion swallowed the impertmence silently, although he did not like it by any means. He also did not choose to notice that Barton had forgotten to to notice that Barton had forgotten to return the purse. They soon arrived at the hotel, which was not far from the scene of the fire; and the bones having been made bare and the port renewed, the latter re-covered his temper. "Barton," said Warden, after a short "Barton," said Warden, after a short time, and without having made any al-lision to their adventure, "I always knew you were the best of us all, and that those blockheads of dons didn't know a good man when they'd got him. They were superb; I know them by heart still; but I almost think this beats them. I wish you had done it in Greek, though," he added with a smile, as he handed him a copy of the famous squib. Barton took it, looked at it with one eye, seemed puzzled for a minute, and then exploded into a roar of laughter, then exploded into a roar of laughter, which he did not attempt to check.

"Oh, this?" he said at last. "I'm glad you like it, though! I was afraid it wasn't strong enough."
"It's quite strong enough, I assure you."

Pressing two fingers over his left eye, and swaying and nodding over the table

-for he had by this time drunk more —for he had by this time drunk more than enough to render any ordinary man incapable of doing anything—he dashed at the paper and wrote rapidly in a sprawling hand, laughing to himself from time to time with enjoyment of his own work. At the end of an hour or rather more, during which he had consumed the whole of another bottle of port, the task was done. He threw himself back triumphantly in his chair, upsetting the ink bottle in the process, hurled the pen to the other end of the hurled the pen to the other end of the room, and tossed the paper, all smeared and blotted, but not quite illegible, to Warden. "There you are," he said.

"That'll wash."

Warden read it over quietly; and then, without a word, handed two bank notes to the author, who pocketed them forthwith, and then called out—

"Waiter! a bottle of brandy! and now we'll make a night of it."

Alas for Warden! Before long he began to think that he had fallen into the clutches of a demon—that he had raised a fiend from whom he should never be able to free himself. The hour was already very late; but many other hours a hend from was already very late; but many other hours flew by, and still Earton sat there, drinking brandy, talking, quoting, spouting Greek, and boasting—all in a style which, though always coarse, was at first amusing and even witty, but very soon degenerated into such sheer, unuterable filth devoid of either wit or humour, that even Warden, who was not particular, and who was not listening to him for the first time, was amazed. At last, sleepy and weary as he was, and almost overcome by the reaction that had followed upon his escape from such extreme danger as that in which he had been placed so short a time since, the extreme danger as that in which he had been placed so short a time since, the disgusting monotony of his guest's talk became torture. If the man would but get drunk enough to be put into a hackney coach and sent away! But no—the more he drank, the more he talked the clearer grew his voice, and the steadier his hand, although, no doubt, he would have found it impossible to rise from his chair. Warden made as many hints as he could about his own fatigue; but he might as well have spoken to the bottle as to Barton. Nor did he dare to march off to bed, for fear of what might happen; for the waiters had retired long ago. Five o'clock, and he sat there sat Barton; six o'clock, and he sat there still; seven o'clock, and the house was stirring; but he seemed more immovable than ever. At last, without remembering how, Warden dropped asleep in his chair from sheer exhaustion; and when again he woke, the first thing he saw was Barton, curled up upon the heart rug, sleeping like a child. "There's one comfort," he thought to himself, rather revengefully, as he took his way wearily to the Denethorp coach: "the beast must be killing himself—and not by inches." A HISTORY OF THE BIDDLES

It is pitiable to think of the vast number of men who go on from day to day suffering mental and physical torture as a result of their weakness, while right at their doors other men are being cured of the same disease. One who has not known it himself cannot realize the feelings of a man in an advanced stage of Nervous De-bility, nor does he hear it, for these men do not talk of their troubles. Even when they are fortunately led to use the remedy which is now so well known-Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt-and are cured by it, they do not mention it to their closest friends; hence the prevalence of this trouble and the means of cure are appreciated only by those who have had experience. And yet I have thousands upon thousands of grateful patients who are willing to testify to their cures by and who would be glad to share their knowledge with others if written to. I send the names of these men to any one who requests them. There is not another remedy in the world to-day that has proven as effective. Its cures speak volumes for the good work it has accomplished.

It is an absolutely positive cure for all forms of Nervous Debility, Loss of Memory, Losses, Impetency, Varicoccle, Weak Stornach, and all those Physical and Vital Weaknesses, Confusion of Ideas, Kidney and allied complaints, Rheumatism, Sciatica, etc., etc. It has cured thousands after every other known remedy has failed. The fact is, medicines cannot cure these complaints, as you well know if you have tried them. Electricity-which is nerve force-is the power that has been drained from the system, and to cure it must be replaced. This IDr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt will do. It is the crowning triumph in electrical science, and its cost is within the reach of every sufferer.

PAY WHEN CURED That is my plan to all who suffer. I guarantee a cure in every case I accept, and ask no pay until youare cured if you will secure me. "As nearly as I can remember I have suffered from Bronchial Asthma for ten years. It seems to effect me in every part of my body. I had a splitting headache, feverishness and nauseous pain in the stomach. I coughed continually, and was very rarely able to sleep soundly at night. It was hard to get my breath, and in damp or wintry weather my trouble always increased. "Although I had spent a great deal of money without much benefit, with the doctors here in St. John, I had faith in Catarrhozone when I read how it cured Captain McDonald, of Kingston, of the same disease. So I went to my druggist, Mr. B. Travis, Main street, and asked him about Catarrhozone. He told me it was highly spoken of by many of his good customers, and so I bought the complete outfit, and paid one dollar for it. "Well, I improved every day, and in one week my son told me I had never been so well. I continued Catarrhozone for a few weeks, using the inhaler several times during the day, and took it to bed with me at night. It cured me perfectly, and I can strongly recommend it for
