but his testimony fell flat, and those who expected a sensation were very much disappointed. Cadet Truman Carruthers, of Illinois, told the court of a fight he had had with Cadet James A. Shannon, of had with Cadet James A. Shannon, of Minnesota, during the encampment of 1899. Carruthers seemed to treat the matter as a huge joke, notwithstanding the fact that he had his jaw broken and was knocked out in the fight. Carruthers, in reply to questions from the members of the court, said that he had been called out as a fourth-class man on account of his refusing to obey orders of an upper classman, and he accused himself of being rather too fresh. Supt. Mills and Commandant of Cadets Hein were the only other witnesses examined, and they produced a lot of extracts from records of the academy as to the efforts made by the authorities to abolish hazing of every variety in the institution. In reference to the death of former Cadet Booz, the records showed that he had resigned on account of trouble with his eyes, that his father's sanction in writing accompanied the young fellow's resignation, and that the Worst Paint n writing accompanied the young fellow's esignation, and that the West Point uthorities and the War Department at
