The French are as likely as any other people to take advantage of an opportunity to lighten their conjugal obligations. The "agents" will probably make a living.

Drink Hearty, Judge.

From the St. Louis Call A story with a moral is told in this city on a venerable judge, honored for his ability and integrity and greatly beloved by all. He abounds in all those natural, gentle, and kindly courtesies that win hearts, and in these qualities, as on the bench, he is no respector of persons. Un-fortunately he is a bachelor, and takes his meals at restaurants. While dining at Faust's the other day a rough-looking chap, standing at the bar, caught his eye and uxdaimed: "Take suthin' judge." His honor gently declined. The invitation was repeated, when the judge reluctantly accepted, not willing to have the man, whose counterance seemed somewhat whose countenance seemed somewhat familiar, fear that he was slighted. As they raised their wine-glasses the man exclaimed: "Drink hearty, judge; you sent me to the pen for fourteen months once, but I don't hold any spite agin you on that account."

Tricks of the Canning Trade. According to the Trade, a newspaper published in the canning interest of Baltimore, there are in that city fifty-seven firms that deal only in "seconds" or doubtful goods. These goods are obtained from doubtful dealers as "swells," or cans that have the ends Falged out on account of the fermentation of their contents. The cans are taken to a convenient place and "re-pressed." This consists of first punching a hole in the top of the can to let the gas out. The cans are then placed in hot water and heated to expel the air and gasses and then reseated. They are then abeled with a bogus label and sold at low prices comparatively. They are probably mostly sold in large cities to the poorer classes. The only safety in buying canned goods is in seeing that the genuine label of a reputable firm is on each can.

When Whitewash Will be Needed.
From the Boston Times.
"How's business, old boy?" inquired friend of a dealer in whitewash.

"Well, it's not very brisk just yet," was the response, "but it will soon pick up, and as I'm in with the politicians I'm sure to as I'm in with the politicians I in sure so have a good boom."

"I don't see what the politicians have got to do with your business."

"You don't? Why, they've been painting Chicago red, and pretty soon they're going to whitewash their candidates, by way of contrast, I suppose. D'ye see?"
