genuine Russian sauce, but this is not necessary, and to our American tastes it seems somewhat incongruous.

Slices of tenderloin, daintily broiled and rare, may be served with this sauce, which should be poured into a hot platter and the tenderloins laid over it. A Hamburg steak is very nice with this sauce. As every good housekeeper should know, a Hamburg steak is not a steak at all, but a mince of beef moulded in flat balls, which are either fried or boiled, but must in any case be kept rare. It is an acceptable way in which to dispose of the tough end of a porterhouse steak, which should never be allowed to come on the table with the rest of the steak, but should be either minced for Hamburg balls or used in a stew. To season a pound and a half of Hamburg steak add a teaspoonful of enion juice, a liberal teaspoonful of salt and a saltspoonful of pepper. The meat must be minced as fine as sausage meat, and there should be neither fat nor sinews with it. A chopped onion minced very fine or a good-sized shallot may take the place of the onion juice. The minced beef may now be moulded into ittle/cakes and broiled, or, if you prefer, dipped into the yolk of egg and bread crumbs, and fried brown. This will keep it rare in the center, as it should be. Indeed, a Hamburg streak is sometimes served at gentlemen's suppers without cooking. It must then be made of the tenderest meat and garnished with anchovies, capers and parsley, and highly seasoned. This practice of eating raw beef, however, is not commended now by physicians as it formerly was, when mothers often gave little children well-seasoned, scraped beef as a tonic.—New York Tribune.

FIT FOR QUEENS.

The Trousseau of the Princess Melita-Magnificient Bridal Outfit.

Something of the magnificence and extent of a royal trousseau is described by an English paper, which gives an account.) the outfit prepared for the Princess Melita of Edinburgh, who was lately married to the Grand Duke of Hesse. The principal portion of the trousseau was made in England, but many of the beautiful dresses are distinctly French in treatment, The wedding gown was of thick white corded silk, embroidered in front with nearls in soraws of orange of thick white corded silk, embroidered in front with pearls in sprays of orange blossoms and true lovers knots, pear-shaped pearls representing the bloom of the blossoms. The bodice and epaulettes were also covered with the embroidery.

A German prejudice prevented the bride from wearing real pearl ornaments, "each gem being supposed to prognosticate a tear," but the imitation article has no meaning beyond its beauty. A short white silk cloak, embroidered in silver, accompanied the More elaborate still is the dress in which the bride arrived at Darmstadt. It is of cloth the color of a Catherine Mermet rose, and around the skirt is an irregular embroidery on black net in a fancy design of silk in pale blue, gold and black. Small conventionalized but-terflies of the same net are studded all over the skirt, and velvet to match the cloth and net trim the waist. A Louis Seize coat of cloth similarly embroidered goes with this dress. The court dress in which the young Grand Duchess will hold her first draw-

Afraid of Redicule.

St. John's, Nfld., May 25.—Ex.Premier Whiteway's supporters here decided to give him a public welcome and reception yesterday. Bands were engaged, banners and transpareneise were prepared, and a throng gathered at the railway depot to greet him.

But when the train arrived it was found that neither Whiteway nor his lieutenant, Bond, were aboard, they being ashamed to face the ridicule of the city. All St.John's is laughing over the fizzle. It has done Whiteway's cause great harm. Even some of his supporters admit that his chances of ever recovering the Government are slight.

Foster's $25,000 Libel Suit a Failure. LONDON, May 25.—The trial of the actio LONDON, May 25.—The trial of the action for libel brought against The Westminster, M.P., has resulted in a verdict for the defendant. Mr. Foster asked for £5000 damages, claiming that the paper had libeled him in an article on the management of the Industrial Investment Corporation of London, of which he is managing director and the Colonial Finance Company, of which he is deputy chairman. Mr. Foster also brought suits on similar grounds against The Chronicle, The Statist, The Financial Times and other papers, but it is not likely that they will be tried.

Schwartz, Dupee & Co. wired Dixon: The wheat market to-day was weak. Trade was largely local and the buying principally for short account. Uncertainty as to the extent of damage resulting from last week's frost is the principal feature of the market at present. Reports were conflicting, but in the main indicate less injury than was thought to exist a few days ago. The outside short interest in the market has been largely iquidated, and the heavy shorts here have either covered entirely or materially reduced their lines. The export demand was practically nothing notwithstanding ocean freights were offered at a nominal figure. Argentine wheat was reported as selling at 55 1-2c c.if. Liverpool. What is to become of 5,000,000 bushels of No. 2 red in store here is a conundrum that no one seems able to solve. Samples of it have been forwarded to New York and failed to meet with approval. There is undoubtedly a large amount of this grade of wheat here that is in first-class condition, and a great deal of it to which suspicion attaches. There is one thing dead sure, No. 2 red wheat from 70edo and Detroit can be placed at the seabcard about two cents cheaper than it can be shipped from here. With no apprehension in regard to the crop condition, July wheat would without doubt show a sharp decline even from the present low price. The fact that continental cables have brought no buying orders during the past few days may be construed as evidence that no damage to the crops on that side resulted from the cold special speil expected there.
