The Late Yacht Race.

Scottish American Journal, Sept. 18.

We are sure that all our readers regret the flasco which concluded the last international yacht races for the America's Cup. It is to be regretted from almost every conceivable point of view, but most of all because of the bitter feelings which have been engendered. But no impartial observer can in the least blame Earl Dunraven therefor. His conduct in the matter has throughout been strictly honorable, straightforward and sportsmanlike, and in return he has been most unfairly treated by the American press, the New York Yacht Club and the American people generally.

most unfairly treated by the American press, the New York Yacht Club and the American people generally.

The action of the American press regarding the yach races and resulting dispute has simply been disgraceful. People looked to it for a true and faithful account of whatever transpired at the races, but instead it gave a partial and varnished account, suppressing all that told in favor of Valkyrie III., or against the Defender, the New York Yacht Club, or the American excursionists viewing the races. It was only from an occasional slip of the pen, and by reading between the lines, that one could form any conception of the real state of matters during the races. The press, however, could not possibly avoid telling what was apparent to all present, that the fleet of excursion boats was greater and their conduct more reprehensible than on any former occasion; but it tried to minimise this by asserting what was not true—that the Defender was more interferred with by the excursionists than was Valkyrie III. All present know that is untrue, and absent readers can readily conceive whether it is at all probable when among those present the Defender had a thousand friends (all most anxious for her to win) to Valkyrie III.'s one. In the accounts of the first race, indeed, several slips were made from which some of the truth leaked out—that the conduct of certain boats in "poking their nose right in front of Valkyrie III. was disgraceful," and that of an-out—that the conduct of certain boats in "poking their nose right in front of Valk-yrie III. was disgraceful," and that of another—a large three-decker—in purposely blanketing her to windward, "was thought-less and unfair," etc. It will have been observed, however, that, while the press says that the Defender was likewise interfered with, not a single instance is specified. The truth is, that Valkyrie III. was so interfered with and obstructed that the races were reduced to a perfect sham, and so Lord Dunraven resolved to withdraw from them altogether unless a free course was assured him—a fair field and no favor being the fundamental basis of all such contests. damental basis of all such contests.

Lord Dunraven simply wished for his yacht a fair field and no favor; as he considered it impossible to obtain this in New York Bay he asked the cup committee to arrange to hold the races somewhere—anywhere—where a free course would be had; or if they insisted on sailing here, to agree to declare it no race in the event of their being satisfied that either yacht had been unduly interfered with by outsiders. The offer of Lord Dunraven's, perhaps, does not so much mean unbounded confidence in the integrity of the cup committee, as that the integrity of the cup committee, as that the interference was so apparent and great that no observer could fail to recognize it.

Lord Dunraven explains that his action in this matter is not in any way due to the astounding decision of the committee upon the protest by the Defender of having been fouled by Valkyrie III., before starting the second race; in fact his letter withdrawing was written and delivered before that won derful decision was made known to him or the general public. We still adhere to the opinion that, seeing the alleged fouling took place before the race started, the committee had no more right to take cognizance of it. integrity of the cup committee, as that the place before the race started, the committee had no more right to take cognizance of it than if it had happened a month before in Erie Basin; besides, the committee and the Defender are practically one; so it was, perhaps, absurd to expect any other decision on the protest than that which was given. It may be true, as alleged, that the committee had an underhand understanding with one of the Defender's owners, Mr. Iselin, that the latter was to offer to resail the race in the event of their awarding it to him, but the event of their awarding it to him, but the committee and he must have had a poor idea of the spirit and feeling of a true sp and so the spirit and feeling of a true sports-man and gentleman if they thought for a moment that Lord Dunraven would agree to any such arrangement. Cosmopolitan, how-ever, as the population of this country is, we by no means regard Mr. Iselin as a rep-resentative American sportsman and gentle-man.

Outrages at Cheng Tu TO BE INVESTIGATED BY AN AMERICAN COM

western China.

He cabled Secretary Olney to day that the Chinese government had withdrawn its opposition to the commission, and that the latter will start at once for the scene of the riots. The riots at Cheng Tu occurred late last spring, but owing to the distance of Cheng Tu from the coast, weeks elapsed before even the first reports reached the cable terminus. While no American missionaries were

While no American missionaries were killed, much valuable mission property was destroyed, and the purpose of the commission is to fix the responsibility for the outrages, secure the punishment of the guilty parties, and probably financial reparation for the losses sustained by the missionaries. As the British missions suffered much more than the American missions, and in their case there was actual loss of life, our state department sought to secure the occupantion department sought to secure the co-operation of the British government in making the investigation, and in a joint demand upon the Chinese government for full reparation, just as was done in the case of the Ku-Cheng investigation.

as was done in the case of the Ku-Cheng investigation.

The British government consented at first, and charged one of their consuls to represent it, but delayed sending the latter, so that our government, finding that the British would not be ready until well along in the fall, decided to take independent action.

The Chinese government did not relish this plau, but according to Minister Denby's despatch, it has finally given its consent to the inquiry, and will send a Chinese official as a member of the commission.

The representatives of our government will be Sheridan P. Read, U. S. consul at Tien Tsin, Commander Francis M. Barber, U. S. naval attache at Tokio, and Fleming D. Cheshire, the interpreter of the United States legation at Pekin. Mr. Cheshire will go as the secretary or recorder of the commission.
