

right round and went the other way, which led back to the right road, he repented, for repenting is to turn around and go the right way.

The Boy King. Tell about Manasseh, the twelve-year-old king, of his good father, in whose ways he did not walk, and of his long years of idol worship. Dwell upon this being worse because the boy's father had set him a better example.

Manasseh's Sin. First, he did not worship God as his father did. Next, he did worship a false god, and, worse than all, put up an idol, a carved image in God's house. Not doing right leads to doing wrong.

The Punishment. God says he will punish sin, and he must. A father punished his boy for doing wrong, saying, "If I don't, he will keep on."

The Repentance. Describe the turning of the king's heart to God, after which God forgave and brought him back home.

Put five steps of repentance on board, and drill children upon them: First, feel sorry; second, say so; third, "Please forgive me"; fourth, turn right around; fifth, follow Jesus.
