Southpaw Barry, as before stated, spoiled his usefulness by being too liberal with his passes, but after the second he settled down and the Pets never got a man to second, the locals being retired in order. There was a high wind blowing across the field that bothered the outfielders, especially in right. Bill Phyle was on the sick list, Joe Kelley playing third and Crooks, the new man from Trenton, of the Tri-State, going to centre. Crooks is a big fellow and resembles Pat Dillard on his feet. He did not do anything with the bat, but accepted everything that came his way in the field.
