But ere Marie could say more she was interrupted. Bursting into tears, evoked as much by dread of what was to come as anger, Vivien wildly declared that she would hear no more.

"You are slandering him," she asserted. "He is not here to defend himself, and you avail yourself of the opportunity to say things that are not, that cannot be true. Yet no, you shall not go away exulting in the unhappiness you have cost me. I will know the worst, but not from you, Marie, for you are embittered against Aymer. It is by this more womanly cousin of yours that the tale shall be told: she shall speak of him more kindly and judge him less harshly than you do!"

Marie averted her race, and shaded it with her trembling fingers. She could not bring herself to reveal to VIvien how far she was from the truth. Never had Claire lavished such affection on her English lover as she had given, against her will, to the very man she had been most eager to pun-

"I have forgiven your brother," she went on to say. "I have ceased to grieve as keenly as I did at his cruelty; and Marie and I will go back to our own dear home, and endeavor to forget him. Tell him we are ready to do this, If he will but restore to me the papers I have so urgently entreated him to give up, and exculpate me in the eyes of my friends."

"You perplex me as much as Marie did," cried her hearer, "It is not in Aymer's nature to wrong—to rob you. Begin your story from the beginning, and let me gather up the threads as you go on. My life upon it, I shall be able to prove that my brother is innocent-that, in some unaccountable manner, you have mistaken him!"

Claire smiled sadly.
"I wish I could think with you. It is I wish I could even say to you it is I who have been to blame; but how can that be? I did not seek to know him. I was more inclined to shrink from the handsome Englishman who, at the house of our friend, Madame Mercier, was introduced to me one evening; but, when he distinguished me above everyone else, and came again and again, solely, as he whispered, to see and converse with me, could I help feeling flattered by his attentions?"

I suppose not; but go on," said Vivien, with a sigh, and a fear creeping into her heart that Aymer had not been as blameless as she wished to

"It was in Paris that I made the acthing him. quaintance of Lord Esselyn, as I have just related; and I was greatly grieved when madame, taking not of our acquaintance, and growing uneasy at it, sent me with her sister to Versailles, in order to put an end to it. You will say, why did she do this? and I amswer, because she knew that, some time before her death, my dearest mother had arranged for me a marriage with the eldest son of an old friendan arrangement to which she considered it my duty to concede."

"Mais non, for he followed me to Versailles, and contrived to meet me when I walked in the grounds of the old chateau in which we were residing. He when I walked in the grounds of the old chateau in which we were residing. He taught me to think that they were cruel who would have separated us, and that it was not right to compel me to obey the wishes of the cad. He told me, again, and again, how, in his own country, the jeunes demoiselles were permitted to choose for themselves and permitted to choose for themselves, and that his heart revolted against customs that were opposed to all he felt to be right; and I listened, till I began to think as he did, that it would be more sinful to wed Monsieur Claude Dumesnil, now I had given my affections to another, than to fly to England as he proposed and take refuge with Lady Esselyn and you."
"But you did not do this."
"No. My lord would not consent that I should write to Marie, my deer friend.

I should write to Marie, my dear friend, and best adviser, lest she should exert her influence in favor of M. Dumesnil, and his impetuosity, his ardor, his apparent sufferings, carried me out of myself, till I gave consent—I know not how it was won from me to meet him in the little chapel in the park, and there be privately united in wed-lock by an English friend of his own."

"But this marriage did not take place?" gasped Vivien, breathlessly. "Helas!" sighed Claire, "but it did!
At early morning I stole from the chateau, met him at the chapel, the ceremony was performed, and then with the same haste and secrecy returned home till the evening, when he was to come again and take me to England and to Improved Financial Status of the First Congregational Church.

Larger Amount of Money Raised in 1898 Than for Many Previous Years -Gratifying Annual Reports.

The annual business meeting of the First Congregational Church was held last night in the school room, with the pastor, Rev. J. W. Pedley, in the chair. There was a large congregation present, who displayed much enthusiasm when the gratifying reports were being presented. The church treasurer's report showed receipts of $3,169 57. This is the largest amount raised in years. The statement was received with applause. The reports of the various societies in connection with the church showed a Lord Esselyn. In his absence they have been received by Lady Vivien, and for her sake they will, I feel sure, consent to postpone all further discussion till he returns, or she is better able to enter upon the affair in which they have TREASURER'S REPORT.

PASTOR'S REPORT. The pastor's report was characteris-tic of hopefulness itself. He asked that the watchword for the future, as in the past year, be "Hopefulness and Confidence." The congregation had every reason to be thankful, as they started the year with a clean sheet, and a cash balance on hand. He asked the parishioners to put their heads and hearts into the work, and said that if this was done the church would soon be dragged out of the hole. The report also stated that 26 new members were MAY SELL PART OF THE PROPERTY. During the evening Mr. Pedley stated there had been some idea of selling a portion of the church property to the west of the edifice, and using the money thus raised to help wipe out the mort-gage. He thought this would be a capital idea. The matter will come up at the first meeting of the finance board.

The pastor said this was a matter to feel happy about.

At the conclusion, Mr. J. Dickson moved a vote of thanks to the pastor, and in doing so said that he had performed his arduous duties in a capable manner, and the congregation and Mr. Pedley had always worked harmoniously together.

Mr. Spry seconded the motion, which carried amidst applause. Mr. Pedley replied feelingly.

In response to the pastor's appeal to raise more money in weekly offerings, a number of the congregation agreed to increase their grants. The increase will total up some & per Sunday.

During the evening the ladies of the church served light refreshments. The church now promises to enter upon a new era of prosperity; the members are all feeling very hopeful, and prepared to work hard to wipe out the debt in its entirety.

A Doctor's Remedy

Shiloh's Consumption Cure is the prescription of a skillful physician, and has been used in successful professional practice for nearly half a century. All doctors who know its merits endorse it in the strongest terms. Dr. A. E. Salter, one of the leading physicians of Buffalo, N. Y., writes to the S. C. Wells Co., of Le Roy, N. Y., as follows: "I am glad to testify to the value of your Shiloh's Cure in all cases of throat and lung trouble. From my personal knowledge it is a specific for coughs of every form, and I am prepared to say that it is the most remarkable remedy that has ever been brought to my attention. Indeed, I believe that it is a cure for consumption in its first stages. "It is, of course, out of the common run to give a testimonial of this sort, but the value of your remedy is so evident that I, for once, have waived professional considerations, and send this, hoping it may be received in the same spirit in which it is written." Shiloh's Consumption Cure has effective tonic and expectorant powers. You can hasten and help its curative action by proper living, just as you can defeat it by injudicious living. By proper living is meant, proper dressing, proper food, sufficient sleep, and having a pure atmosphere constantly about you, and this includes plenty of sunlit air. Persons suffering from consumption need good milk, plenty of cream, entire or whole wheat bread, fresh eggs and good fresh meat. Shiloh's Cure is sold by all druggists under a positive guarantee to refund the purchase money in case of failure. 25c., 50c. and $1 a bottle throughout the United States and Canada.
