Sunset Ranch

The Northwestern accommodation from Omaha was three hours late, when the towering height of Devil's Peak loomed in sight. It was the first break in the unending waves of sunburnt yellow prairie since they had crossed the state line.

The lion Tom McGowan, representative to congress from Sunset and adjacent settlements, strolled into the drawing room car from the smoking compartment and smiled in a large, contented way at the two ladies occupying it.

"Well, be in Sunset in an hour and fifteen minutes, girls," he announced. "Mighty good to take a look at the old peak, isn't it, Nell?"

Mrs. Danforth Wickes laughed happily. Her blue eyes were sparkling with tears, and she searched with aimless, joyous futility around her chair for her handkerchief.

"Oh, Tom, it's so good—look over that side, dear, I think I dropped it there—will there be any one to meet us? Why, my goodness, it made me cry the minute I saw the old rock loom up out of the clouds. Look over under those magazines, Tom, maybe I left it there. I was just telling Lady Seardsdale about the time we ran away from the ranch, and hid up there on the side of the peak until dad—oh, did you find it, Tom?—thanks so much."

Tom handed her the bit of linen and lace he had found wedged down behind her chair, and turned to the occupant of the next chair.

Lady Seardsdale did not look up at him. She was bending forward, watching the sweep of country, as the train curved around the base of Devil's Peak. McGowan was silent also. Slowly, contentedly, his glance followed the slender lines of her figure in its close-fitting crepe silk gown of semi-mourning. Her face was

"Do you like it?" he asked, a trifle awkwardly.

She raised her face and smiled, her dark eyes dreamy and wistful.

"I had hoped there would be more trees," she said. "It looks so barren."

"Well, there aren't many trees for sure," McGowan returned, regretfully. "I suppose it does look pretty bare when you aren't used to it. There's cottonwood over the other side of the ranch along the creek, and lots of scrub pines on the buttes. Guess Nell and you and me will have to take a camping trip through the Yellowstone after we get enough of the ranch. She'll see trees there, won't she, Nell?"

"Plenty," said Mrs. Danforth Wickes. "But she won't get tired of the ranch. We'll keep her busy. You'll be all braced up and strong in no time, Lady Bell."

Lady Seardsdale looked from brother to sister with quiet, amused appreciation. Then catching the deep, straight look of love from Tom McGowan's eyes, she leaned forward again to the window.

"We'll be in Sunset at three-thirty-five," McGowan said. "There'll be a wagon to meet us all right." He bent again over the blonde head. "Anything you want, Lady Bell?"

"Nothing," she said softly, "nothing at all," and Tom went out of the car, tingling, happy, proud of her and himself, and worthy of her. Proud of her? Why, Lord Harry Johnson! He'd just like to see any woman in Wyoming or Washington either that could hold a candle to her. Hadn't she walked in ahead of the whole crowd at the capital ever since she had showed up late Winter? Of course she'd had a rest of the women. Every body knew about her before the Julian Quintards turned from him, but the small, perfect figure, brought her over from London as their head, was dangerously near. He moved, his big, right hand away from the back of her chair quickly. It was almost impossible to resist the temptation to lay it on her head caressingly.

OPERA COSTUME FOR YOUNG MATRON.

The regal beauty of a certain society side where the skirt is fastened is a narrow trimming of gray chenille and inside of this hand embroidered in shades of mauve and violet, mixed with threads of silver—the work of a Japanese artist. The medallions of gray silk fillet net in the front and back skirt panels are repeated in the drapery of the bodice fashioned on the simplest lines. Jewels of great value add much to the beauty of this attire.

ST. PETER'S Y. M. A.

The ninth anniversary of St. Peter's Y. M. A. was well celebrated last evening in the new hall, Douglas avenue, when a large number of the members gathered and enjoyed a good time. The programme opened with a reading, John McIntyre, followed by an address by the new president, E. J. Mahoney. He spoke of the intellectual lines. Rev. Father Borgman, C. S. R., spiritual director, gave an exhortation, followed by a selection by the orchestra.

The other numbers were: Solo, Harry McQuade; reading, John O'Brien; orchestra selection, reading, John McIntyre; solos, Harry Doody, Frank McGraw and Louis Donnelly, and an address by Rev. Father Dine, C. S. R.

The society are looking forward to a season of considerable activity along athletic lines. Basket ball will be commenced next week. An up-to-date bowling alley has been established and is being well patronized by the members.

SCHOONER WRECKED

Halifax, N. S., Nov. 13.—The schooner Basutoland, Capt. Rafuse, loaded with lumber from Point de Chene bound for New York, struck at White Point and the timbers were quickly broken through and the crew were obliged to take to the boats. By the time Captain Rafuse got away from the cabin he was standing knee high in water.

Later the Basutoland floated but is waterlogged. Tugs towed her to safety and she will be brought to Canoe tomorrow.

When the Stomach, Heart, or Kidney nerves get weak, then these organs always fail. Don't drug the Stomach, nor stimulate the Heart or Kidneys. That is simply a makeshift.
